Says U.S. Excludes Colored From Jobs

House Group Considers Plan to Reopen Old District Precinct.

Washington's crime record was injected into the Senate debate on the antilynching bill yesterday during an eloquent attack on the measure by Senator Borah (Republican), Idaho.

"The criminals of Washington are taking $30,000,000 a year from the citizens of Washington," he said.

"That is depriving them of property, of life, liberty and property certainly without due process of law. And the men in charge of the District seem to have thrown up their hands; they do hot know how to deal with the situation.

"Yet the Federal Government is here; the Federal Government is back of them, but they are not by any means doing as well as are the people of the Southern States in meeting the crime problem."

Calls D. C. "Crime Capital."

At another point Senator Borah called Washington "the second, if not the greatest, criminal capital in the world."

Seventy-five persons were robbed here in one night, he said, adding, "How close the police were I do not know."

Senator Borah also charged executive departments with discriminating against colored applicants for jobs.

"We are dealing with the race problem," he said. "We need not blind our eyes to that fact. And the race problem is a problem that does not readily yield to legislative solution, to the rigid demands of the law.

Assails U. S. Treatment.

"Take for instance the colored girl who under great handicaps has earned the right to be employed by her Government upon equality with every one else.

"She goes with a certificate of competency from the Civil Service Commission to one of the departments here in Washington—here in Washington under the aegis of the Federal Government, and when she enters the door and her color is dis-

Flood of Queries On Cherry Trees Heralds Spring

First rustle of spring!

Edward J. Kelly, assistant to Parks Superintendent C. Marshall Finnan, disclosed yesterday that inquiries are beginning to be received in large quantities on the blooming of the Japanese cherry blossoms in Potomac Park.

A St. Louisian wrote in to say that the only thing preventing the setting of a date for his marriage is uncertainty over the time of the floral display. Both he and his bride-to-be want to honeymoon in Washington when it's blossom time.

Kelly regretted he couldn't accommodate the Missourian, but it is still far too early to predict when the first buds will burst. As a rule, the display begins in late March or early April.

Dr. Logan Clendening

In today's health talk, Dr. Clendening writes:

"Colds that come back three or four or five times in a season are usually not colds at all. They are sinus infections that keep flaring up through the cold weather. Or else chronic infection of the tonsils that lead to a regular succession of sore throats. Chronic sinus infection may finally lead to chronic bronchitis."

U.S. Asks Soviet If Mrs. Rubens Has Been Held

By the Associated Press.

Moscow, Jan. 7.—The United States today demanded Russia tell whether Ruth Marie Rubens, of New York—the mysteriously missing "Mrs. Donald L. Robinson"—had been arrested and, if so, on what charges.

The formal note was presented to the foreign office on instructions from Washington after previous requests for information were unanswered.

The United States asked full details of Mrs. Rubens' disappearance from a Moscow hotel December 9. A week earlier her traveling companion, known only as "Donald L. Robinson," had vanished from the hotel next door to the American Embassy.

The formal demand for information on the case, which has created an international sensation, was based on Washington findings that Mrs. Rubens was an American citizen. She arrived in Moscow November 6, with Robinson, traveling on passports later shown to have been obtained fraudulently.

Mrs. Rubens, however, had a legal passport issued in her own name and Americans here considered it possible that, if she had been arrested, she had been released and deported for lack of charges.

Chautemps Calls For Strike Parley

Paris, Jan. 7 (AP).—Premier Camille Chautemps, cautioning against the "incalculable damage" of recurring strikes, today called spokesmen of capital and labor to meet Wednesday in his office.

Fears were expressed that failure of the conference inevitably would result in collapse of the People's Front coalition government.

500 Women, Children, Injured Quit Hospital, Crying for Water.

By the United Press.

Madrid (Saturday), Jan. 8.—Nationalist Lieut. Col. Rey Darcourt and an estimated 2,000 to 2,200 combatants and noncombatants surrendered yesterday in the besieged city of Teruel, bringing to a virtual conclusion all rebel resistance inside the city, the government announced today.

While a truce was effected for the zone around Asuncion Hospital, from which streamed emaciated women and children as well as wounded soldiers when the insurgents surrendered, the battle continued to rage outside the city.

Thirty rebel soldiers who were holding out in the cellar of Santa Clara Church also surrendered.

Yesterday morning, it was announced, an emissary was sent from the hospital bearing a penciled message to the Spanish Red Cross begging that women, children and wounded combatants be allowed to leave.

At 2:30 p. m. the removal of those in the hospital.

Those who filed out of the building were in a pitiful state. Many fainted, while others pleaded for water. All were half starved and extremely weak.

The refugees were sent immediately to military posts for medical attention. They were given food, water and hot coffee of which they had long been deprived.

Immediately after the refugees were ordered removed three companies of assault guards were summoned from Valencia to prevent possible incidents among the prisoners embittered by suffering from the long siege.

4,000 Wild Ducks Guests for Night At U.S. Sanctuary

Business is booming at Roaches Run, the Interior Department's wild fowl sanctuary on the Mount Vernon Memorial Highway, just below Washington Airport.

The office of National Capital Parks yesterday reported more than 4,000 migrant ducks—teal, canvasback, mallard and other species—spent Thursday night at the water hostelry. Southbound from regions as distant as Northern Canada and beyond, the birds continued on their way after resting and feeding.

Japanese Beat British Police In Foreign Area

Copyright, 1938, by the United Press.

Shanghai (Saturday), Jan. 8.—British and Japanese authorities clashed in Shanghai today over the alleged beating of two British policemen by Japanese soldiers, while in North China Chinese troops were reported burning and wrecking in accordance with the communist "scorched earth" policy.

Retreating steadily before the three-pronged Japanese drive through Shantung Province, the Chinese were said to have destroyed all construction works in the harbor of Haichow.

Most of the fighting on the Chinese side in North China was being done by guerrilla troops, adopting communist tactics in severing Japanese lines of communication and attacking isolated forces. The Japanese command in Peiping admitted that the Chinese guerrilla forces were acting in Hopei, Anhwei, Shantung and Shansi provinces.

The latest "incident" involving Britons in Shanghai resulted from the alleged attack on two British policemen stationed in the International Settlement. British authorities reported Japanese soldiers invaded the British zone and slugged both men.

British military headquarters of Maj. Gen. A. P. D. Telfer-Smollett, commander in chief of the British forces in Shanghai, protested to the Japanese authorities, warning them to withdraw their soldiers from the British defense zone, and the Japanese complied. It was understood the municipal police were planning a further protest.

Night Work Decreed for Lynch Bill

Leaders Will Lengthen Sessions to Force Senate Vote.

By Robert C. Albright.

Senate leaders moved swiftly last night to smash a threatening filibuster against the Wagner-Van Nuys anti-lynching bill after an eloquent denunciation of the measure by Senator William E. Borah (Republican), of Idaho, stiffened the back of the Southern opposition.

Borah said the South has met the "race problem" with "greater patience, greater tolerance and greater success than any people in the history of the world." He urged the Senate not to pass a measure that would "pillory" the South, stir up "old fires" and benefit neither white nor colored people.

Agree on Strategy.

As less than a score of Southern Senators, cheered by support from the Western Progressive, planned a last ditch fight to prevent the measure from coming to a vote, the majority leadership agreed on a strategy of day and night sessions, commencing Wednesday, to force action.

The bill, which has passed the House, is certain of enactment if it comes to a Senate showdown, with perhaps 70 of the 96 Senate votes claimed for it. Fearing an extended filibuster so early in the session will defer action on important Administration measures, leaders ordered the Senate into session an hour early today and planned to invoke the night session grind next mid-week.

Senator Frederick Van Nuys (Democrat), of Indiana, co-author of the bill, declared the night session strategy "means the bill will be passed within a week."

Borah Avoids Filibuster.

Senator Borah, who is opposed to filibusters, made clear that he was not participating in this one, but merely speaking in opposition to what he declared was "an attempt upon the part of States practically free from the race problem to sit in harsh judgment upon their sister States where the problem is heavy and sometimes acute."

"I reject," he said, "the pending measure as fundamentally not in the interest of the white people of

Blessing Phoned To Eloping Pair By Ford Official

Tampa, Fla., Jan. 7 (AP).—Gertrude Bennett, 17-year-old daughter of Harry Bennett, Ford Motor Co. official, received by telephone from Detroit today a parental blessing for herself, and Russell Hughes, her 21-year-old trap drummer husband.

The couple, who eloped Monday at Auburn, Ind., were found today in a three-room flat where they had paid $3.50 for a week's rent in advance—until Russell could find a job.

Today her father, happy that his daughter had been located, made arrangements for the young couple to spend a month in Florida.

Quit Hating and Slump Will End, Capital and Labor Told at Inquiry

Chrysler Recalls 55,000 Men; 9,000 Back at Work in Steel

Fifty-five thousand Chrysler workers, laid off just before Christmas, will return Tuesday when closed automobile plants are reopened, the company announced yesterday, while a Ford spokesman indicated many of its employes laid off during the holidays already had returned.

Nine thousand steel workers have been recalled to work, 4,000 of them in United States Steel plants and 2,000 to 3,000 in Bethlehem factories, the Associated Press reported.

General Motors Corp., which had laid off approximately 20,000 employes in Michigan and 10,000 elsewhere, did not say when they would be recalled.

Just before the Christmas holidays the Big Three automobile producers and some of the smaller independent companies announced layoffs or reductions in hours or both. Chrysler replaced its 40-hour-week with 32 hours but did not say yesterday if the 40-hour week would be resumed.

The Ford Motor Company was reported, from Detroit, to have had approximately half of the 87,000 men normally employed at its Rouge plant in Dearborn at work just before Christmas. The company spokesman said less than 25,000 Ford workers were idle and the company expects to have all back around January 17.

British Trade Treaty Is Sped By Hull Notice

Action to Negotiate Starts Reciprocal Pact Definitely on Way.

By Franklyn Waltman.

Definitley starting Anglo-American trade negotiations seriously on the way, Secretary of State Cordell Hull yesterday issued a formal notice of "intention to negotiate" a reciprocal agreement with the British government on behalf of the United Kingdom, Newfoundland and the British Colonial Empire.

That announcement sharply advanced the negotiations with the British for reciprocal trade concessions. The Secretary of State made public a list of approximately 1,000 articles of import which will figure in the range of negotiations.

That does not mean American tariffs will be reduced on all of these articles—nor even on most of them—but it does mean tariffs will not be reduced in the forthcoming Anglo-American agreement on any articles not in the list, unless supplementary announcement is made.

Given Till Feb. 19.

Interested persons will be given until February 19 to submit briefs with the Committee for Reciprocity Information pointing out why the existing tariff rates should or should not be reduced on the articles listed by Secretary Hull. Those wishing to be heard also must file applications to that effect by February 19. The public hearings will open March 14.

Meanwhile a mission of British trade experts will sail from London early in February to carry on discussions with the State Department's experts. All of that means that, barring some unforeseen hitch, an Anglo-American trade agreement may be expected during the spring. Consummation of such an agreement would constitute the capstone of the Hull reciprocal trade program, and many authorities regard it as the most important event possible for the stimulation of world trade.

Not only are the discussions for an Anglo-American agreement making progress, but in another week or so Secretary Hull is expected to announce the "intention to nego-

Leaders Deny Penalty Tax Is Aimed at Ford

Doughton and Vinson Reply to Charges of Lamneck.

House Ways and Means Committee leaders denied last night that proposed penalty taxes on undivided profits of "closely held" corporations were aimed at Henry Ford or any other "specific" company.

In a joint statement, Chairman Robert L. Doughton of the Ways and Means Committee and Chairman Fred M. Vinson of the tax sub-committee, said they had not considered what families or corporations would be affected, but merely the principle of equitable taxation.

The statement followed a charge in the House on Thursday by Representative Arthur P. Lamneck (Democrat) of Ohio, a Ways and Means committeeman, that Henry Ford, and other closely held corporations of his type, were being "singled out" for penalties.

The Doughton-Vinson reply declared the Ford Corporation would not be affected by the special tax under the only tax return made since passage of the undistributed profits tax.

"In that return," they said, "it showed distribution of dividend of practically 70 per cent of its net income, according to Treasury informants, and with such a dividend policy it would be automatically excluded from the surtax imposed by this provision.

"It is very probable that the ef-

Head of Sears Roebuck Proposes Truce to Speed Upturn.

Hour Cut at Same Pay, Green's Plea

Roosevelt Will Resume Conferences With Business Chiefs.

By Sidney Olson.

In complete agreement that action now to stop the recession was urgent, a mail-order magnate and two labor leaders yesterday filled in details of the blackening picture of depression painted during the week before the Senate Unemployment Committee, investigating recession causes.

At the White House, President Roosevelt announced he planned a series of conferences with business leaders to discuss over-production in industry.

On Thursday, Mr. Roosevelt talked with William S. Knudsen, president of General Motors Corporation. Yesterday the President said that in continuing such discussions with leaders, he would seek viewpoints on methods to attack the problem of glutted markets.

Quit Hating, He Says.

Gen. Robert E. Wood, president of Sears, Roebuck & Co., who suggested to the committee that "if we all—industry, labor and government—would quit hating each other, this recession would stop overnight," testified that substantial tax revision, further Government spending, gold de-sterilization and a revival of confidence were necessary to a return of good times.

William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, who traced the recession largely to the "speculative character of business gains in 1936-37," demanded shorter work-weeks, maintenance of present wages, extension of the public works program, stimulation of private home-building, broadening of social security to provide Nation-wide unemployment compensation, and extension of the work-relief program.

Homer Martin, president of the United Automobile Workers, affiliate of the Committee for Industrial Organization, describing "Detroit bread-lines two blocks long or more," revealed that out of 200,000 C. I. O. workers in and near Detroit, "about 50 per cent" had lost their jobs in the past two months.

Byrnes in Agreement.

Senator James F. Byrnes (Democrat), of South Carolina, chairman of the committee, told reporters he was in hearty agreement with Wood's statement the recession would end if "hating" could be stopped.

"He really put it together when he said that," smiled Byrnes.

Martin said C. I. O. figures showed "normal" employment of Chrysler Corporation was 80,000 men. He said the recession had reduced this to 15,000. Byrnes drew from Martin the admission that the 80,000 total represented Chrysler's peak employment last year, attained in February. The 15,000 remaining, he said, work only from 12 to 24 hours a week.

[The Chrysler Corporation announced at Detroit last night, according to the Associated Press, that its plants would reopen Tuesday, returning to work the $55,000 working when the holiday shutday, returning to work the 55,000 note.]

Hunger Menaces D. C. Children After Collapse of Velvet Ball

Possibility that hungry Washington school children would be forced to go without their free lunches was foreseen last night with the financial collapse of the Velvet Ball the night before.

While there appeared to be enough in the treasury and the larder to care for the children the rest of the month, their fate for the rest of the school year was problematical.

As a social event, the ball at the Mayflower Hotel was a success. Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt was there and a galaxy of other celebrities. But it is not likely the school lunch fund will profit any.

It won't, at least, unless somebody comes through with a substantial check.

Mrs. John Boyle, jr., chairman of the Citizens Permanent Committee, Inc., which has made itself responsible for serving hot lunches to 5,200 of Washington's school children, last night said an audit of the receipts from the ball had not yet been completed.

Mrs. Boyle, however, was opti-

Heroic Boy, 16, Cheers Girl, 13, as Surgeons Splice Them Together to Combat Her Burns

Modern surgery made John Melvin Bonner and Clara Howard one yesterday when they were joined in a "Siamese twin" operation whose ultimate purpose is to replace the large quantity of skin burned from Clara's body more than a year ago.

Taking only a local anesthetic, the two colored children looked on without crying as doctors detached the upper end of the flesh tube on John's left side and inserted it inside an incision made in the girl's elbow. She is 13, John 16.

The operation was performed at Emergency Hospital, where the youngsters have been patients since last November, and took about two hours. Last night they were doing satisfactorily, encased in yards and yards of adhesive tape.

Young Bonner, who has been studying in the hospital so he won't miss graduating from Shaw Junior High School this month, buoyed up Clara's spirits on the operating table and helped make the delicate task a success. She was virtually a stranger to him when, last fall, he volunteered to give her about 24 ounces of his own skin, that she might not have to go through life disfigured and disabled.

The Washington boy and the girl, a North Carolinian whose aunt and grandmother live here, will be bedfast for several days. Then they will be allowed to walk around, hitched together by the 18-inch tube of John's skin.

Meantime, the John Melvin Bonner trust fund, established by Emergency Hospital in recognition of the youth's heroic act, grew by $14.37 yesterday with the receipt of a check for that amount from a woman in Puerto Rico.

John wants to be a doctor or electrical engineer, he isn't sure which and the trust fund is to help insure his obtaining higher education.

Leaders Deny Penalty Tax Is Aimed at Ford

Tax

fect of the undistributed profits tax upon the Ford Corporation was not known by those who went to the defense of Mr. Ford."

Lamneck had charged that the Administration had been "relentlessly on the trail" of Ford and corporations of that type "since NRA days" and the new tax was "in keeping with past performances."

Informed last night of the Doughton and Vinson denial that Ford would be affected, Representative Lamneck replied that "nobody has seen their tax schedules, nor does anyone know how much Mr. Ford is going to pay out in dividends this year."

Favors Its Repeal.

Lamneck added:

"I know the Treasury Department's counsel, Herman Oliphant, told the committee last year they were after closely held corporations like Ford and duPont. There isn't any doubt in my mind that this is another one of Mr. Oliphant's tax plans. He proposed the undivided profits tax and told us any company that couldn't live under it ought to get out of business. The whole tax ought to be repealed."

Lamneck said he intended to fight the new penalty tax proposal in the full Ways and Means Committee, and expects other Democratic support. "There is no reason why two corporation doing the same kind of business and earning the same income shouldn't be treated alike," the Ohio Democrat said.

Refer to "Attacks."

The Doughton-Vinson statement referred to "attacks made today upon the recommendations of the sub-committee of their treatment of family and closely-held corporations."

"A specific charge," said the two committee chieftains, "was that we were 'after Henry Ford.' Such a charge is inaccurate and misleading both as to the purpose of the provisions and its effect."

Doughton and Vinson said the fact that Ford would not be affected was made known to sub-committee prior to its action on the proposal and "thus it is evident that the charge is inaccurate that the sub-committee was taking punitive action against Mr. Ford or any other specific taxpayer."

The two tax draftsmen explained again the new tax excludes corporations with net incomes of less than $50,000; all corporations distributing in dividends 80 per cent of their net income; and all corporations not "family or closely held."

"No Specific Firms."

"The sub-committee had no information submitted to it of any specific corporations which would be included," said the statement. "We were not concerned with the names of corporations affected. Our concern was with the principle involved to protect the revenues of our country and to secure a just and fair proportion of taxes from family and closely held corporations as therein defined. . . .

"The provision in question will secure the fair share of taxes which should be borne by these family and closely held corporations which are used as devices to permit such stockholders to escape from the payment of individual surtaxes which are levied upon all income taxpayers, whether such income be from earned income, interest, dividends or other source.

"We rest our claim for support of this provision upon inherent fairness. Those who believe that such family and closely held corporations should be permitted to avoid their fair proportion of the tax burden, of course, may oppose it with their usual vigor."

Previously Explained.

It previously had been explained by Vinson that between 500 and 1,000 family or closely held corporations would pay a tax almost equal to the present undivided profits levy, whereas the great bulk of corporations would pay a more moderate tax recently agreed upon.

As it works out, this small, so-called "closely held" group of corporations would pay the new revised 16 to 20 per cent undistributed profits tax to which all comparatively large corporations would be subjected. From their remaining income, after paying that levy, they would be permitted to deduct $40,000 or 30 per cent (whichever is greater). Then they would pay the special, flat penalty tax of 20 per cent upon the balance.

Doughton told reporters the sub-committee expects to report to the full committee next mid-week. He said he contemplates only about a week of public full committee hearings and hopes to have the measure enacted by the House before February 1.

Cummings' Proposal to Transfer U. S. Court Funds Called Excellent Idea.

By Franklyn Waltman

Like the man who bit the dog, when a Government official recommends that some of his power and prerogatives be taken away from him, it is news. And it is such news that Attorney General Homer S. Cummings makes in his annual report to Congress.

WALTMAN.

Modestly buried in that report and generally overlooked is a proposal by the Attorney-General recommending that Congress transfer from the Justice Department and lodge in an administrative division of the Supreme Court jurisdiction over the budget and expenditures of the Federal courts and individual judges. It is an excellent suggestion and one that Congress should adopt.

As Mr. Cummings says, "there is something inherently illogical in the present system of having the budget and expenditures of the courts and individual judges under the jurisdiction of the Department of Justice." Why? Because the Justice Department, representing the Government, is the chief litigant in the Federal courts. It is a party in interest, not alone in all the Federal criminal cases, but in a large and growing number of civil actions involving the Government and its citizens.

There is no intention here even to intimate that the Attorney General or his aides would use their power over the purse strings of the judiciary to bring a recalcitrant judge into line. But the fact that the Attorney General could do so if he wished constitutes a factor in the relationship between the Justice Department and the courts which should be eliminated—and Mr. Cummings evidences he recognizes that fact.

It is but human nature to like those people who like you, and the Justice Department undoubtedly has a greater sympathy—unconsciously, if you please—with the difficulties of judges who are sympathetic with Justice Department contentions than with judges cold to those contentions.

On the other hand, each judge knows he must get Justice Department approval for additional sums for his court for the employment of additional clerical help, or secretaries, or supplies. Indeed, he must go to the Justice Department even to shift about funds appropriated to him, such as giving a hard-working clerk a raise. One is never coldly impersonal and objective with one who holds the purse strings.

Thus Mr. Cummings, declaring that "the courts should be an independent, co-ordinate branch of the Government in every proper sense of the term," projects a valuable recommendation. By sponsoring the proposed change himself, he eliminates from discussion of it the ground for any contention that it is aimed at him. Would that we had more public officials who view their own functions with such impersonal objectivity.

Indeed, Mr. Cummings' report this year is a great improvement over the annual reports of the Attorney General for many years back because of his realistic approach to pressing problems. Freed from the necessity of making out a case for the Federal Court reorganization plan, he now convincingly discusses the congested situation of Federal Court dockets and what should be done.

There never has been any doubt about the need for additional judges in the Federal courts. Indeed that need became apparent years ago and its correction annually has been urged on the President and Congress by the Judicial Conference, but with little success. One glaring deficiency of the legislation passed after the collapse of the court reorganization fight was the failure to attack the problem of congestion by creating new judgeships.

Not only did Mr. Cummings, in his report, indorse the recommendation of the judicial conference for the appointment of four additional circuit judges and 12 additional district judges, but he proposed the appointment of ten more district judges and another associate justice for the District of Columbia Court of Appeals. Thus he urges the creation of 27 additional judges.

There can be no doubt as to the need for all of these additional judges. As the Attorney General points out in his report, the word "current" in describing the condition of the court docket requires explanations which frequently demonstrate that it is far from current as a layman understands that word.

Moreover, as was revealed in the responses of Federal judges to Senator Frederick Steiwer's inquiry last spring, many dockets are kept "current" only through a judge working day and night and "shooting from the hip," as one explained the inability, due to the pressure of cases, to give to each the required study and deliberation.

Deserving of consideration also is Mr. Cummings' proposal for the creation of an administrative division under the Supreme Court, in charge of a permanent administrative officer, to keep track of the work of the courts and their needs for assistance, and to ascertain what judges are free to assist in courts temporarily congested due to unusual circumstances. He would put jurisdiction over the budget and expenditures of the court under this official.

Now that the court reorganization plan has been abandoned and Congress need not be disturbed by properly-felt apprehensions over a flying squadron of the "king's judges" roving around the country, it can and should consider this proposal on its merits.

Nothing in any country is so important as the administration of justice. If those springs are kept clean and efficient, one need never fear the poisoning of democracy. This Congress may yet win for itself a place in history by giving earnest study to the Cummings proposals, followed by determined action.

Night Sessions on Lynch Bill Planned to Force Senate Vote

the South, not in the interest of the black people of the South, not in the interest of national unity, not in the interest of national solidarity, not in the interest of extinguishing crime."

The Idaho Senator, long opposed to the measure on constitutional grounds, discussed it yesterday from the standpoint of "policy." The speech was one of his major oratorical efforts in recent years. It was the old Borah speaking, pacing back and forth behind his chair, emphasizing his remarks with short charges forward.

Full Attendance Listened.

A full attendance listened, with Senators wheeling their chairs to face him, and the chamber was silent except for the absent-minded rattling of keys by Senator George W. Norris, Nebraska Independent. Wearied from the effort, Borah was mopping his face with his kerchief as he concluded his arguments, and received the handshakes of 17 friends and antilynching bill opponents.

Senator Kenneth McKellar (Democrat), of Tennessee, followed Borah, as the Southern sector again took up the fight. McKellar detailed the progress made by colored citizens in the South. He said statistics show Southern States are enforcing laws against lynching—that lynching has decreased, "where other crimes have increased."

Compares Northern Thugs.

A similar point was stressed by Borah.

"While the South lost eight lives by lynching last year, the North lost 300 white people because of acts of violence committed by thugs," said the Idahoan. He asked why the bill did not direct the Federal Government to step in when State officers failed "to protect the citizens on the highways or in the home against the combined acts of thugs."

Borah then reviewed the South's reconstruction period, which he called "the most regrettable page of American history." He compared the North's reconstruction measures with the anti-lynching bill and said "the same arguments are made in support of the pending measure; to wit, the Southern people are incapable of local self-government."

"It is not in the interest of the Nation at this time," he said, "to stir old embers, to rouse old fires, to lacerate old sores, and again after all these years to brand the Southern people as incapable or unwilling to deal with the question of human life."

Borah cited statistics showing property ownership by colored citizens has been greater in the South than in the North. He said colored leaders have conceded the rate of crime for colored persons is much greater in the North than in the South. He said the South is educating more colored children than all the children in New England.

Borah declared the South had accepted emancipation after the Civil War and had "set about to accomplish a bringing together of the races politically in the best possible way to save white civilization." He said that "in all these things which make for the advancement of the race as a race, the North has no advantage over the South in the story of the advancement of the Negro."

He said that by "educating them, they are fitting them for citizenship, and by educating them they are schooling them against crime, and they are laying the only sure foundation there is for extinguishment of crime upon the Negroes."

Strikes at "Condemnation."

"And now, because there is the power, because there are the votes, because it is possible to do so, it is proposed to call these great States and these people before the bar of public opinion and after 70 years of arduous effort on their part, condemn them as unfit and unwilling to deal with this great problem."

He said "the race problem is a problem that does not readily yield to legislative solution," and added:

"There is a race question, and no law has ever been made tight enough or strong enough to remove all harshness and to eliminate all injustices. Only the patient processes of education, only the uplifting power of religion, only the tolerant noble-minded men and women who gave their thought to this cause can remove or mollify such injustices. And that is being done; it is being done in the South; that the South is achieving; that the record shows it is achieving and it is entitled to our commendation and not our condemnation."

Senators drifted out of the chamber after the Borah speech, and at one point in the McKellar address that followed, there were only a half dozen Senators present. When McKellar "challenged" proponents of the measure to show where any other crime has declined as rapidly as lynching, Senator Tom Connally (Democrat), of Texas, chief foe of the bill, interjected:

"You cannot challenge them when they are not here."

The Senate leaders have had so much difficulty maintaining a quorum, that at one time Wednesday the chamber voted to send the sergeant at arms after absentees.

Jobs

eral Motors Corporation employment figures cited the previous day by Knudsen. Martin said current employment at General Motors was 161,000, with none of the men working more than 24 hours a week. Knudsen had said 190,000 workers were employed. Martin also declared the largest decrease at General Motors occurred during the latter part of October, while Knudsen gave the impression that most workers had been carried through December.

Quotes U. A. W. Economist.

Martin estimated Ford company employment at 90,000 normally, and advanced the belief that employment was at least 50 per cent less in Ford plants in the last month or two, but added:

"I don't think anyone has any authentic information on the Ford company, including Ford himself."

He concluded by reading from a speech made by Jett Lauck, United Auto Workers economist, before the American Academy of Political Sciences at Philadelphia, December 29, which asserted the country was in the grip of a "financial dictatorship" imposed on the country by a "small group of Wall Street bankers headed by the J. P. Morgan Co.," and that this "financial autocracy must be eradicated to save democracy."

Wood testified Sears-Roebuck sales last year, amounting to $575,000,000, were well maintained through the year, as were most consumers' goods, but that nevertheless, in his opinion, the recession was "exceedingly severe" in production, while "relatively mild" in distribution.

He said that in his view prices did not go too high for consumer purchasing power, except in the field of building construction, where materials "went up very rapidly."

He cited the rapid rise in inventories, brought about by the fear of rising prices and through general labor unrest, as a prime cause of the recession, but declared that "this phase is pretty nearly completed."

He expressed doubt a change in the reserve rate would be of any particular benefit, but said: "I do believe we ought to de-sterilize the gold."

Hits "Feverish Profits."

Green struck at "feverish profit-taking" he said took place last year "with the dividends paid by corporations entirely out of proportion to current earnings." He denied high prices could be charged logically to high wages as "deliberate propaganda to intimidate workers into acceptance of drastic wage-reductions." He estimated job losses in recent months at 1,770,000, and emphasized that this figure almost matched those of the worst years of the last depression.

He said that thus far high wage levels had been maintained, in bright contrast with the experience of previous recessions, but demanded flatly that work weeks be shortened while wages be maintained in order to hold "this small but important bulwark against business decline."

In estimating total national unemployment at about 10,000,000, citing federation estimates for November as 8,447,000 Green called the national unemployment census, showing between 7,000,000 and 10,000,000 jobless, "quite conservative."

He appealed for stimulation of private homebuilding through the granting of local tax concessions to builders for limited periods and particularly emphasized the necessity for resumption of large-scale Federal spending on public works and work relief as pump-priming.

William Haber, former member of the Michigan Relief Commission and professor of economics at the University of Michigan, testified 62,000 persons were on direct relief in that State, with the total increasing at the rate of 5,000 a week as the recession developed. The former three-week lag between the loss of jobs and application for relief has fallen to three days, he said, as applicants learn delay may lessen their chances for early relief.

Landon, Knox Rejects Bids to 'Policy Group'

Former Gov. Alf M. Landon, of Kansas, Republican standard bearer in the last national election, declined yesterday to serve on the newly formed program committee of the Republican party. Dr. Glenn Frank, former president of the University of Wisconsin, accepted on Thursday the chairmanship of the committee.

John Hamilton, chairman of the Republican National Committee, extended to Landon, Herbert Hoover, Charles G. Dawes and Col. Frank Knox the committee's invitation to serve as honorary chairmen of the program board. Col. Knox declined to serve on the committee and Hoover declined to be an honorary chairman. Dawes alone accepted the invitation as extended.

Chairman Hamilton, without comment, made public the telegrams he received from Landon.

"I sincerely appreciate the honor the Republican National Committee has done me but regret I will be unable to serve on policy committee.—Alf M. Landon."

Jackson Dinner Talks Awaited As 'Reform' Cue

President, 6 in Cabinet Will Sound Keynote of War on Recession Tonight.

By the Associated Press.

Political onlookers, including many perplexed rank-and-file Democrats in Congress, are awaiting the Administration symposium at 30-odd Jackson Day dinners tonight for fresh light on President Roosevelt's attitude toward business.

They believe the speech may indicate whether the Ickes-Jackson attacks on "big business" or the conciliatory tone in President Roosevelt's annual message gives the real clue to the manner in which the New Deal will attack the recession problem.

Mr. Roosevelt will speak to all the diners from Washington. Scattered over the country as honor guest speakers elsewhere will be six members of his Cabinet, including Secretary Ickes, and 15 other Administration wheel horses of "Little Cabinet" rank or its equivalent, not to mention the President's son-secretary, James Roosevelt.

Ickes will speak at Nashville, Tenn., in the heart of the TVA area where Government competition with private power concerns has produced controversy.

Secretary Wallace, who recently made a conciliatory speech pleading for co-operation by capital, labor and agriculture, will be back in the farm belt at Des Moines tomorrow night to give whatever Administration message he has to the Jackson diners there.

Attorney General Cummings, Postmaster General Farley, and Secretaries Woodring and Roper will be broadcasting from such widely separated sectors as Chicago, New York, Denver and Columbus, Ohio. James Roosevelt is speaking in Boston.

Among all these speeches, that of Solicitor General Stanley F. Reed at Detroit may prove of greater interest to political Washington than any other except the President's. There is a widespread belief that he may succeed Justice Sutherland on the Supreme Court.

U. S. Court Asked To Enjoin Hague's Ban Against CIO

By the Associated Press.

Newark, N. J., Jan. 7.—The C. I. O. and the American Civil Liberties Union took to Federal court today their fight against Mayor Frank Hague, who said "Jersey City will stand firm" against their "Red invasion."

Rebuffed in efforts to hold mass meetings in Jersey City or attempt public organization of industrial workers there, the complainants charged Jersey City officials with entering into "an unlawful plan and conspiracy" to forbid discussion of C. I. O. work.

The suit asked for an injunction restraining Jersey City officials from interfering with the plaintiffs' "free access upon and through the public streets, highways and thoroughfares of Jersey City" or with their holding of "peaceful meetings."

Labor Supports Prevailing Pay In Housing Bill

A.F.L., Building Unionists Oppose Conference Move to Trim Measure.

Attempts to eliminate the Lodge "prevailing wage" amendment from the Administration's new low-cost housing bill, now nearing a conference report, yesterday met the solid opposition of building and construction trades unionists and the American Federation of Labor.

Final decision on the fate of the Senate amendment, which directs prevailing wage scales be paid all labor employed under the act, went over until next week, as conferees adjourned sessions until Monday.

Agreement has been reached on every item in the bill except the wage amendment and another Senate provision assuring housing aid for farmers managing their farms on a "sound" basis and failing to receive help from other public agencies. Action on the farm aid amendment was delayed because it is affected by the wage provision.

Opposed by Administration.

As the Lodge wage amendment is not in the House bill, it can be discarded by the Senate conferees by mere failure to insist on its inclusion. Administration officials favor its elimination, and some Senate managers reputedly hold the same view.

Officials of the building and construction trades department of the American Federation of Labor wired conferees that elimination of the amendment "would result in chaos, lowering standards and wages of workers in the building and construction industry."

Joseph A. McInerney, president, and Herbert Rivers, secretary-treasurer of the department, speaking, they said, for 19 international building trades unions, wired that defeat of the provision would "destroy years of efforts . . . to build up decent American standards of wages and hours and working conditions."

Green Backs Unions.

President William Green of the American Federation of Labor followed this up with a telegram saying the federation "supports the position assumed by the building and construction trades unions."

"The retention of this section," said Green, "would simply mean the reaffirmation and reincorporation in the national housing act of the spirit and letter of the Davis-Bacon act which is now the law of the land relating to the payment of prevailing rates of pay to building mechanics employed in construction of Government buildings."

The conferees yesterday accepted a Senate amendment making mandatory a one-quarter of 1 per cent insurance charge on $6,000 homes insured up to 90 per cent, in lieu of the House discretionary provision.

House conferees on the highly controversial Administration farm bill were still far from final agreement yesterday, but were reputedly near a decision to strike out the provision for "parity" payments in the measure and limit all farm benefits to payments for "soil conservation." Parity payments might cost more than double the $500,000,000 the President sought for the act. Tentative agreement has been reached on tobacco and rice features of the two bills, least controversial provisions in the measure.

Ford Rejected Rail Sale 'Pact,' Senators Told

By the Associated Press.

Henry Ford turned down a proposal that he promise to continue shipping his products over a railroad he was selling in 1929, Edsel Ford told the Senate railroad Committee yesterday.

The Pennsylvania Railroad, it was testified, sought to get the promise when the Pennroad Corporation was negotiating to buy the Ford-owned Detroit, Toledo & Ironton Road. After Ford's refusal, Pennroad bought the other carrier anyway.

Committee investigators contended the pact would have violated Federal law, and this view was shared by Pennsylvania Railroad counsel.

Restrictions Irked Them.

Edsel Ford, son of the automobile manufacturer, said the Ford Co. acquired the Detroit, Toledo & Ironton when it was in bad shape and rehabilitated it, but decided to sell it in 1929, partly because of Government restrictions.

Referring to regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission, he said:

"We had some ideas about rolling stock, but we found we couldn't do the things we wanted."

He corroborated the testimony of Pennsylvania officials that they sought to obtain the written agreement from the Fords.

Rebate Is Forbidden.

A. J. County, Pennsylvania vice president and a director of Pennroad, said the agreement was sought because he did not believe the railroad was worth the $36,000,000 asked by Ford unles a guarantee of future traffic could be obtained.

Under the Elkins act, railways are forbidden to give any rebate to shippers. Committee investigators contended that since Pennroad was willing to pay the purchase price only in consideration of future traffic, part of the price would have been a "rebate" to Ford.

County said he decided it would be "impossible for the Ford Motor Co. to carry on without getting freight out over that line."

Envoys Shifted By Roosevelt In Big Shake-up

Kennedy Goes to London, Davies to Brussels, Wilson to Berlin.

By the Associated Press.

President Roosevelt yesterday announced the most sweeping diplomatic shakeup since he took office, involving the posts at London, Berlin, Moscow, Brussels, Ottawa and Santiago, Chile.

Hugh R. Wilson, Assistant Secretary of State, to be Ambassador to Germany.

Joseph E. Davies, Ambassador to Russia, to be Ambassador to Belgium.

Norman Armour, Minister to Canada, to be Ambassador to Chile.

To Leave After Month.

Kennedy, Wilson and Armour will leave for their posts after the customary month's "period of instruction," during which they will read up on State Department archives relating to their respective countries of assignment.

Davies will not go to Brussels until spring, remaining in this country until then. His millionaire wife, the former Marjorie Post, has been in ill health.

The shakeup leaves open:

The post of Ambassador to Moscow.

The position of Assistant Secretary of State.

The Post of Minister to Ottawa.

The question of what will become of Hugh Simons Gibson, until now Ambassador to Belgium, remained unanswered. Asked this question yesterday, President Roosevelt said he did not know.

Gibson, expert in disarmament, debts and mediation conferences, may be brought back to the State Department for a period of service.

Third Envoy to Moscow.

The shifts mean that Moscow, before many months, will see the third American Ambassador since diplomatic relations were resumed four years ago. William Christian Bullitt, first there, is now Ambassador to France. Davies was there nearly a year.

Significant is the fact that yesterday's changes throw the balance of United States ambassadors decidedly in favor of "career-men"—diplomats who came up through the ranks of third, second, first secretaries and counselor, as opposed to political appointees. There now are nine career men out of 16 ambassadors, and one vacancy.

Choice Pleases London.

London, Jan. 7 (AP).—The appointment of Joseph P. Kennedy as United States Ambassador to the Court of St. James was well received here today. The foreign office limited itself to the statement:

"Naturally we should welcome anyone President Roosevelt chose to nominate."

Informed quarters attached great importance to the appointment of a businessman-economist at a time when "economics is daily playing a greater part in diplomacy."

Gibson Transfer Regretted.

Brussels, Belgium, Jan. 7 (AP).—The replacement of Hugh Gibson, American Ambassador to Belgium, after such a short second term, brought expressions of deep regret today from a government spokesman.

Before his appointment last July, Gibson had served from 1927 to 1933 as Ambassador to Belgium. Mrs. Gibson is a Belgian. He will be succeeded next spring by Joseph E. Davies, now American Ambassador to Moscow.

Germans Enthusiastic.

Berlin, Jan. 7 (AP).—German government circles today hailed enthusiastically the appointment of Hugh R. Wilson as United States Ambassador to Germany. Wilson will succeed Ambassador William E. Dodd, who resigned last month.

Jewish Magnate Is Jailed by Nazis For Hiding Funds

By the Associated Press.

Hamburg, Germany, Jan. 7.—A special court today sentenced Arnold Bernstein, German Jewish ship merchant, to 30 months in jail and fined him 1,000,000 marks ($400,000) for treason and violation of Germany's stringent foreign exchange laws.

The court emphasized Bernstein had been tried not as a Jew but as a businessman who had disregarded the law.

Bernstein already has turned over the Red Star and Arnold Bernstein lines, of which he was operating head, to a managing director named by the German government. In addition to loss of his business, the heavy fine and prison sentence, he was deprived of his citizenship for two years.

Specifically, Bernstein was accused of having a secret New York bank account of $80,000 to $100,000 which he did not declare to the Reichsbank June 1, 1933. This account, Bernstein said, was for use in his shipping business upon which American creditors hold $5,000,000 mortgages.

House D. C. Group Quits Till Monday

The House sub-committee on District appropriations adjourned early yesterday afternoon until Monday morning. Chairman Collins went out of the city for the week-end.

All public welfare estimates were considered except relief, which will be taken up Monday. Public Welfare Director Elwood Street and officials of the public assistance division will ask for more unemployment relief funds, which the Budget Bureau slashed by more than $400,000.

Papers, Irked by Roosevelt Speech, Ridicule American Defense Program.

By the United Press.

Berlin, Jan. 7.—Nazi newspapers, angered by President Roosevelt's attacks on totalitarian powers, joined today in printing sensational stories about 65,000 are starving and freezing in the streets of Cleveland" and mocking the United States' new naval program.

Der Angriff, organ of Propaganda Minister Dr. Paul Joseph Goebbels, led the press attack with a dispatch from New York purporting to describe the misery in Cleveland "where frightful misery has resulted from the city's lack of officially organized aid for the needy."

The Voelkischer Beobachter added ironically:

"We cannot help it, but we find the attitude of these 65,000 Cleveland residents simply unheard of—even undemocratic, we might say.

"There they enjoy the liberty of starving undisturbed and they prove that they are thankless enough not to be satisfied with this liberty."

Der Angriff likewise berated the American defense proposals, asserting that money is being devoted to battleships while people starve.

Dr. Leo S. Rowe Awarded Order Of Dominicans

Pan-American Union Head Honored as Champion of American Unity.

Dr. Leo S. Rowe, director general of the Pan-American Union, was awarded the Order of Juan Pablo Duarte by Andres Pastoriza, Dominican Minister, at the Dominican Legation yesterday.

In recognition of his achievements "as decided champion of any efforts directed to achieve a better comprehension among the peoples of the Americas," Pastoriza placed around Rowe's neck the blue and white ribbon, with medal attached, of the Dominican Republic's Order of Merit. The decoration was bestowed by decree of President Trujillo, of the Dominican Republic several months ago.

Pastoriza, whose government is embroiled with the Haitian Republic over an alleged massacre of Haitians in October, expressed to Rowe "the earnest wish that your work of international rapprochement that you have been carrying on so efficiently may always find in all the peoples of our continent the enthusiastic response that it deserves."

Duce Will Build Navy to Rule Mediterranean

2 Battleships and Smaller Craft to Be Laid Down Immediately.

By the Associated Press.

Rome, Jan. 7.—Premier Mussolini today announced a surprise naval building program to give Italy absolute Mediterranean supremacy over the normal British or French strength.

Il Duce announced construction would begin immediately on two 35,000-ton battleships, 12 destroyers and an undisclosed number of submarines. The sudden move was considered the Fascist answer to what has been described as "the naval race of democratic countries."

Completion of the program by 1941 would give Italy her largest fighting navy—more than 600,000 tons—and place her second in rank only to Russia in submarines.

There was a hint in some authoritative comment Italy intended to assert her position outside the Mediterranean.

Mussolini's step was presented chiefly as necessary to protect the new Italian empire, provide sure communication with North Africa and defend Italy against "attempts at strangulation and intimidation by anyone who arrogates to himself the prerogative of sole custodian of European order."

American naval building and reports the United States planned to create a special Atlantic fleet were mentioned in the press along with French and British programs as the reason for the Italian plans.

(The Italian announcement caused French officials to declare France must meet it. The naval committee of the Chamber of Deputies prepared for an immediate conference of the naval ministry on building two 35,000-ton battleships.)

Nuckols Called To Answer Rule Revoking Bond

Carroll P. (Nubby) Nuckols, convicted several weeks ago of violating the District's antigaming statutes, will have to appear in District Court Monday and show why the bond on which he is now at liberty should not be revoked as a result of his arrest in a gaming raid on I street northwest Thursday.

At the same time yesterday, Nuckols and Lawrence F. Pisani, also arrested during Thursday's raid, were held for grand jury action by United States Commissioner Needham C. Turnage at a hearing on the gambling charges.

Samuel F. Beach, assistant United States Attorney, yesterday presented to Justice Jesse C. Adkins a motion calling upon Nuckols to give valid reasons why he should not be jailed pending his appeal. Justice Adkins, informed that Nuckols had been apprehended in another raid and had other indictments pending against him, issued the rule.

Democracy Alone Lacks Advocates Here—Dr. Sheehy

The democratic form of government alone seems to have no paid press agents in this country, the Rev. Maurice S. Sheehy, D. D., head of the Department of Religion at Catholic University, told the Iowa Club last night. He also urged Congress to act at this session "to alleviate unemployment and to insure justice for farmer and labor.

"Democracy," he said, "is still the finest form of government that the centuries have indicated to us, but we Americans seem to be ashamed to admit the fact. Bitter political partisanship is responsible for so many smoke screens we cannot see what is good in our form of government."

"Nationalism is a curse, but love of one's country is not, and a little genuine patriotism would go a long way toward eliminating the terrifying reports in the Department of Justice files about Nazi and Communist activities in America."

U. S. Parks Aide Pleads Guilty in Pay Roll Forgery

Reno E. Stitley, 29, former chief of the voucher unit of the National Park Service, yesterday in District Court pleaded guilty to nine counts of an indictment charging him with forgery and with presenting false pay rolls.

A total of 12 counts was contained in the original indictment against Stitley. According to Government auditors, approximately $75,000 in Government funds were involved in the transactions.

Justice Joseph W. Cox, taking into consideration Stitley's prior good record, requested the probation officer to prepare a report showing the defendant's past conduct in civil life.

According to the Government prosecutor, Stitley would present semimonthly vouchers for carpenters to which would be added fictitious names.

16 Indictments Returned By District Grand Jury

Sixteen indictments were reported by the District Grand Jury yesterday in that body's first report since it was sworn in early in the week. The indictments were on minor cases that were left from the last grand jury's hearings.

Those indicted were Hubert H. Council, Thomas R. Council, and Martin H. Scott, joy-riding; Robert Wilson McManus, Leroy Johnson, and John Douglas, housebreaking and larceny; Walter Minor, and Robert Stanish, grand larceny; Edward Willis, and William A. Brown, robbery, and Jerome C. Thompson, rape.

'Bootleg King' Held as Head Of Ring Here

Ex-Convict Accused of Controlling Two Stills Seized in Raid.

A "king of bootleggers" in the prohibition era was arrested last night by U. S. marshals, at request of District police, as head of an illicit liquor syndicate which operated two huge stills seized Tuesday night in a raid on a mansion in a fashionable neighborhood at Sixteenth and Madison streets northwest.

The prisoner was Ralph Marcantoni, 38, who gave his address as 313 South Exeter street, Baltimore. Marcantoni is said to have been known to racketeers here, in Baltimore and Philadelphia as "Guinea Ralph." He is a former convict, who has served two prison terms, one for violation of the Federal liquor tax law.

A few hours after Marcantoni had been clamped behind the bars, police announced that 6 of 32 youths arrested in a roundup for robbery suspects during the last 24 hours had been identified as fugitives from justice. Four were fugitives from chain gangs and two of these were identified as having participated in recent robberies.

Held on Auto Charge.

Marcantoni was seized as he arrived here to answer a charge of operating an automobile without a permit. This charge was the outgrowth of another charge placed against him following a liquor raid last November, when he was accused of violating the Federal liquor tax law. He was to appear before U. S. Commissioner Needham C. Turnage today on the latter charge.

The raid on the Madison street mansion was made last Tuesday by Federal agents and metropolitan police, who found two stills, one of which had a capacity of 300 gallons. The officers arrested a man and a boy and confiscated both stills, 400 gallons of illicit liquor, 1,350 gallons of mash in 60-gallon vats and 1,000 pounds of sugar and yeast.

They said the stills were the greatest uncovered since repeal.

Believed Head of Ring.

Mazzeraino Magnaterra, the man seized, and the 16-year-old youth were jailed.

Police said they believed Marcantoni, widely known as a rum-runner and "big shot" bootlegger in the prohibition era, was at the head of the syndicate.

Last November members of the vice squad, headed by Lieut. George Deyoe, seized Marcantoni as he was about to enter a house with 20 five-gallon cans of bootleg whiskey. He was charged with violation of the Federal liquor laws at the time.

Through fingerprints and later, by their own admission, the six suspects, who were identified as fugitives from justice were Clifton D. Hawkins, 24, and Herbert Creighton, 24, both wanted in Raleigh, N. C.; Ralph Beach, who fled a chain gang near Atlanta, Ga.; William Patton, who escaped a labor battalion in Colorado; Roy Cooper, wanted for forgery in Roanoke, Va., and Joe Lawrence, 19, wanted for robbery by the Elmira, N. C., police.

Hawkins told of escaping 17 times from various institutions. Both he and Creighton were sentenced for automobile theft.

Under the arc lights at headquarters Beach and Patton were identified by Paul Knight, clerk at a drug store in the 2500 block of Pennsylvania avenue northwest, as the hold-up man who stuck a gun in his ribs about two weeks ago and escaped with $45. They also admitted holding up a Little Tavern hamburger shop last Sunday night, police said.

Washington's first safe robbery in many days yesterday netted burglars $74.46, stolen from the Cullens Lumber Co., 20 L street southwest. Edwin F. Dutton, superintendent of the company, told police that an attempt was made to open the safe on the second floor of the office. At first, police reported, nothing appeared missing, but later officers discovered the theft. Burglars had broken the handle off the safe.

Borah Assails Washington as 'Crime Capital' covered, she is told the place is filled, which is a lie.

"That happens not once, but many times. She suffers injustice at the hands of her Federal Government. But that is a race question, and no law was ever made tight enough to remove all harshness and to eliminate all injustices.

"Only the patient process of education, only the uplifting power of religion, only the tolerant noble-minded men and women who give their thought to this cause can remove or mollify such injustices or harshnesses."

Crime Curb Discussed.

While Senator Borah was talking, the House sub-committee on District Appropriations was taking steps to put a further curb on crime by reopening the old Second Precinct police station at 1224 Fifth street northwest.

After listening to the testimony of Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, regarding crime conditions in the area and the shortage of police, the subcommittee members indicated they were willing to provide funds for reopening the precinct, although the plan was rejected by the Budget Bureau.

Would Hire 25 New Police.

As approved by the Commissioners, the plan involves the hiring of 25 additional privates, but officers to man the station will be transferred from other precincts.

Members of the House subcommittee indicated they were impressed by Maj. Brown's argument that the reopening of the old Second Precinct station would provide more police for a section of the city that has the worst crime record.

One of the members commented that the cost to the District of the additional police and station maintenance would be cheap if it curtailed crime in any degree.

The plan proposed by Maj. Brown would be to reopen the Second Precinct Station and to shift the Women's Bureau, which now occupies the building, to the old Police Court Building.

Parole Education Urged.

Members of the sub-committee indicated they were pleased with the work of Ray L. Huff, superintendent of penal institutions, and his record of the past few months in operating the workhouse and reformatory.

Huff told the sub-committee that he has reduced operating expenses so that the cost of keeping a prisoner at Lorton is 94 cents a day.

Suggestions for improving the parole system by better education for prisoners were made to the sub-committee by Huff, who formerly was associated with the parole division of the Justice Department.

Georgetown, British Guiana, Jan. 7 (AP).—Tropical rains threatened today to hinder the rescue of J. T. Waldeck, American explorer, stranded on a rock in the Cuyuni River with his wife and two other men.

Fears were expressed that the downpour might cause the river to rise and sweep the explorers off tiny Devils Hole Island into the river rapids.

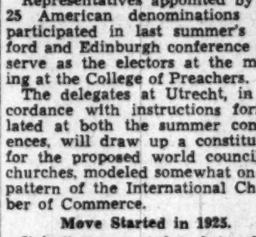
By the Rev. John K. Cartwright,
Pastor, Church of the Immaculate Conception.

There are many new things that we like to look forward to as possibilities of 1938.

The last generation has become so used to acquiring new things; autos, oil-heating, radios, that it automatically tends to identify happiness with an indefinite supply of still newer ones: television, air-dondi-tioned homes, stream-lined fliers to Mars.



DR. CARTWRIGHT.

Underwood & Underwood.

But there are many old things that do not wear out. They can be ignored or pushed in the background. But they are permanent values of the human soul. They are not necessary to a NEW Year, but to a HAPPY New Year.

Such are: the feeling of private responsibility, a sense of public morality and private decency, the habit of self-restraint, the spirit of workmanship in every trade and profession, family training with its revival of general good manners, the practice of religion by everybody (not just the clergy).

These things never existed in perfection. But they did function, and they tend to disappear.

We do not look for the revival of the horse and buggy. They have been replaced by better things. But the above values have not been improved upon. They have only been rejected because they are difficult.

Church Session Here Will Push World Council

10 Delegates to Conference in Holland to Be Chosen at 3-Day Meeting.

A forward step toward achievement of a world council of churches will take place here Monday when ten churchmen will be elected to represent the United States at a preliminary conference to be held in Utrecht, Holland, May 9 to 13.

RichbergBacks Co-operation of U. S., Business

Importance of Knowing Public Needs Cited by Ex-NRA Head.

By the Associated Press.

Donald Richberg yesterday drew on his experience as one-time NRA head to express support of President Roosevelt's proposal for Government-business co-operation in planning the future production of goods.

"It is essential to produce a more orderly flow of business by a general understanding of the likelihood for marketing goods and of the public's purchasing power," he said in an interview.

"What happens now?" "When we get a market, we go in and sell it to the limit. The result is, we oversell it in one year—and the next year we have a slump. We've taken all the money out of the customers that's available."

Could Be Adjusted.

If the needs of the public were known, Richberg said, the factories turning out goods could be adjusted to that level and kept on a fairly even keel.

At present, he added, "the decisions of individual business men become terrifically important, especially because the little fellows watch for a cue and follow the big fellows. It's fine when they underestimate the market for their goods, but it's tough when they overestimate."

Richberg expressed the belief such co-operation between Government and business would not interfere with efforts to check monopoly.

"My philosophy of the situation," he said, "is that you need to consider both factors in the relation of Government and business: First, stamping out the abuses of monopoly; second, encouraging co-operation and co-ordination of business under public scrutiny."

Would Separate Activities.

The two activities of Government should be separate, he said while seated in his law office, because NRA experience proved "you can't tie up co-operation and prosecution in the same body."

The planning body would center its work on finding out what the American public could afford to buy, so that businessmen—large and small—would have some idea what to expect.

Thus, Richberg said, the planning body, knowing how many automobiles would be needed, could tell the steel industry how big a customer the auto industry would be. Groceries and dry goods stores could tell from factory plans how much money the workers would have to spend.

Neither price-fixing nor division of the market would be involved in the program, as he sees it.

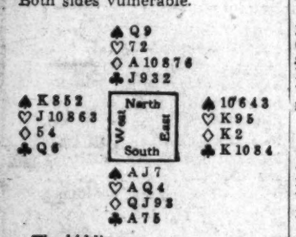
Contract

By Mrs. Ely Cubertson

Timing the Play.

In playing a three notrump contract, declarers very often face the problem of driving out two key-cards held by the enemy. Sometimes it does not matter which of these cards is first attacked but, in a surprising number of cases, that very point, i. e., the order of attack decides the final result. Today's hand is a good illustration.

South, dealer.
Both sides vulnerable.



The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 N T	Pass	2 N T	Pass
3 N T	Pass	Pass	Pass

West opened the heart Jack. East played the King, and declarer ducked. Hearts were continued, and declarer, in with the Ace, considered his best plan of play. He could count four diamond tricks, even if the King was off-side. These, with two hearts and one club, totalled seven. Obviously, two spade tricks would complete the quota. Considering that two spades were in plain sight, it looked like clear sailing. But declarer had forgotten that vital matter, tempo! He let the diamond Queen ride and it lost to East's King. East returned his third heart, clearing West's suit. After the diamonds were run, the spade finesse was tried but this, too, lost, and West gobbled up his ten and eight of hearts, for the setting trick.

Declarer had overlooked the vital point. He should have seen that if West held a five-card heart suit, and both the diamond and spade finesses were "wrong," it would be vital to knock out West's entry first. The diamond King, if held by West, could not be an entry. The spade King could. Thus, South should have ignored the so-called natural and persuasive immediate diamond play in order to lead a spade away from the Ace-Jack toward the Queen. Only after assuring himself of two spade tricks should he have gone about clearing the diamond suit. Obviously, this correct plan of play would have resulted in a fulfilled contract.

Winter Work.

More than 3,000 WPA workers are assured winter employment by a further allotment of $946,646 of emergency funds to continue the national war against the Dutch elm disease . . . According to provisions of the order, practically all of the money will be expended in the next six months for the employment of men on relief . . . When the winter began, approximately 4,000 scouts were employed in the infestation areas.

The newly allotted funds, plus an unexpended balance of the $460,800 for the eradication fight appropriated to the Agriculture Department, together with work relief money allotted on July 1 of last year, bring a total of $3,284,326 for the present fiscal year.

Among the others having prominent parts in the arrangements are: Miss Evelyn Adams, (recorder of the General Land Office, Interior), Harold Blanton (WPA), William J. Colman, president, National Capitol Young Democratic Club and an administrative official in soil conservation under the AAA.

The A. F. G. E. "will give all possible support" to the resolution in the House by Representative Ramspeck (H. J. R. 551), and sponsored in the Senate by Senator McCarran, providing compensation for per diem and per hour employes of the Federal and District governments who receive no pay for December 24, which was declared a holiday for other employes by executive order. The acting comptroller general ruled that per diem and per hour workers could not be paid for this day unless they actually worked. Commented President Stengle:

"The resolution is in the interest of fair play, and we are heartily in favor of it. The basis of pay of an employe should not determine whether or not he is to enjoy a Christmas holiday."

Miami-New York Passenger Plane Sets a New Mark

A record flight time between Miami and New York for passenger airliners was established yesterday by an Eastern Air Lines plane which left the Florida city at 9:15 a. m. and arrived at Newark Airport 5 hours and 49 minutes later.

Another Eastern airliner, flying the same route earlier in the day, established what is believed to be an all-time speed record of 262 miles an hour on part of the trip between Raleigh, N. C., and Richmond, Va.

The nonstop flight from Miami to New York, made in a Douglas DC-2 plane under the direction of Pilot Ed Barber and Co-pilot Buddy Harmon, was aided by a tail wind during the greater part of the trip. During the flight an average speed of 204 miles an hour was maintained.

Airline officials said it was customary for the Miami-New York plane to stop here for lunch, but that the 14 "passengers were as excited as the pilots and wanted to go on."

For An Economic Policy.

There would seem to be more than coincidence in the launching, in Des Moines, of the Economic Policy Committee just prior to yesterday's announcement of the long list of commodities on which the United States will consider granting tariff concessions to Great Britain. Publication of this list will startle many American producers, and sustained effort will be needed to allay the fears aroused.

That the new Economic Policy Committee is well designed to make this effort is apparent both from the wording of its articles of incorporation and the character of its membership. The organization is nonpartisan in composition, counting as members such prominent Republicans as Henry L. Stimson, Nicholas Murray Butler, Charles P. Taft and William Allen White. And its indorsement of Administration policy is strictly limited to "the principles enunciated by Secretary of State Cordell Hull."

It is clearly the intention of the committee to take the whole issue of restrictive trade barriers out of the area of party politics and to treat it as the major part of the recovery problem which it is. In the words of the committee's excellent preliminary statement: "Having different approaches toward many contemporary problems, all its members hold in common the belief that increased production of wealth is essential to enhancing the general welfare, and that such production can be advanced by the growth of mutually advantageous trade among nations. All believe that world economic appeasement is essential to the lessening of the political and emotional tensions underlying present world unrest."

The articles of incorporation make plain that the committee "would deplore the adoption of any policy which would injure any essential or efficient industry, or the standard of living of the American people." It is exactly that, of course, which it will be accused of doing. This makes more significant the committee's purpose to promote discussion on the connection between world trade and world peace and "of the bearing of international economic relationships upon our domestic prosperity." From such discussions a more far-seeing viewpoint on the recovery problem is likely to arise.

So far as the reciprocal trade agreements program is concerned the new committee is behind the Administration. It is particularly unfortunate, therefore, that the Administration is indirectly obstructing the work of this group.

New Deal politicians have lately shown such hostile animus toward leaders of American business as to create widespread suspicion of all Administration moves. The cheap bombast of Mr. Ickes has made it more difficult for Mr. Hull to bring his patient constructive efforts to fruitful accomplishment. Yet the absence of rational economic policy in so much of the Administration's activities does not make this effort to create one from outside less timely.

Not The Right Kind Of Game.

Representative Bruce Barton has a great reputation as an advertising man. It is to be hoped that he will make a great reputation as a statesman. But in statesmanship, as in advertising, he will be judged by results.

His bill to abolish the War Finance Corporation and transfer that agency's powers to the Secretary of the Treasury will not produce results. The reason is simple. Under an act of Congress in 1929 this Government corporation is already in the process of being liquidated by the Treasury, and that job is very nearly completed. Since the liquidation is in charge of officials otherwise paid by the Government, it does not involve extra expenses to taxpayers.

The War Finance Corporation happens to be one institution that did not cost the Government anything anyway. It had $500,000,000 capital, all of which was fully engaged at one time. But this capital was fully returned to the Government, plus earnings—after expenses and losses had been deducted—of about $65,000,000. The earnings may be said to have represented slightly more than the cost of the money to the Government.

Mr. Barton's zeal for the abolition of useless Government agencies is commendable. But an advertising man ought not to waste his ammunition shooting at dead partridges.

Insurance Is Not Relief.

Testifying before the special Senate committee appointed to investigate problems of unemployment and relief, Chairman Altmeyer of the Social Security Board this week emphasized the fundamental distinction between unemployment insurance and relief outlays.

The former payments, as he explained, are made as a matter of right to the insured worker, on the basis of his past earnings. Relief payments, on the other hand, are based on need and have no relation to the previous employment of recipients. It is most important to keep these distinctions in mind in order to safeguard the permanent insurance system against amendments that would destroy its true character and cause it to degenerate into a relief measure.

Mr. Altmeyer stresses the fact that unemployment compensation is designed to tide workers over periods of temporary idleness, and to cushion the first shock of a business recession. An insurance fund created by taxing pay rolls obviously cannot take care of the chronically unemployed. Benefits must be limited, both in amount and duration, if unemployment insurance is to be kept solvent. Furthermore, a good many classes of wage earners have to be excluded because of the administrative obstacles in the way of comprehensive coverage.

At the present time only 22 States and the District of Columbia are ready to pay benefits. And of those who are insured a number will not be able to qualify for receipt of benefits, or will receive very small sums because they have not had sufficient employment in the recent past to establish full claims.

Many persons now on relief rolls, moreover, are ineligible for unemployment benefits. Hence the burden of relief costs will not be sensibly lightened by the insurance system for some time to come. In the long run, however, unemployment insurance will decrease the relief load in two ways.

It will keep those who are normally employed, but temporarily idle, from swelling the ranks of relief recipients. And, by storing up purchasing power during busy periods in order to make it available during a depression, unemployment insurance will tend to level the peaks and fill the valleys of the trade cycle. Thereby it will help in keeping more workers permanently employed.

Compulsory unemployment insurance is no longer an experiment. Its social and economic value has been demonstrated in many industrial nations. But its value is contingent on not expecting too much from the device, and, above all, on not attempting to make it cover all relief needs.

Revenue Or Regulation?

The Federal taxing power may not be employed to enable the Government to achieve unconstitutional ends. But it may be and sometimes is used to regulate or even destroy the taxed. Indeed, few taxes in this country today are levied solely with a view to producing maximum revenues. In the highest brackets our graduated income taxes have become so confiscatory that they unquestionably yield less than they would if rates were more moderate. The major objective here is not fiscal but social—to prevent the growth of large fortunes.

Liquor taxes, as another illustration, would probably not be maintained at present high levels if they were imposed solely for the sake of revenue. Nor would there be any excuse for high protective tariffs, definitely designed to discourage imports, if revenue considerations alone determined the character and amount of customs duties. In short, employment of the power to tax for ulterior purposes is a device sanctioned by long usage and one which has enabled the Federal authorities greatly to extend their regulatory powers, despite constitutional restrictions.

Under the present Administration, however, there has been a much more pronounced tendency to use the taxation power primarily as a disciplinary or punitive weapon.

The tax on undistributed profits provides an outstanding example of a trend toward which indifference is no longer possible. Ostensibly levied as a revenue measure, this tax was undoubtedly conceived as a means of hampering corporate growth by forcing the distribution of earnings in the form of dividends. The present system of corporate income and undistributed profits taxation, moreover, shows a bias in favor of smaller business units not explicable on the ground of lesser ability to pay. As a matter of fact, a high rate of taxation on net income may be more easily borne by a small, prosperous corporation than by one earning inadequate returns on a large capital investment.

The spirit of the reformer, rather than the seeker after revenue, is revealed again in the plans of the House sub-committee now considering revision of the undistributed profits tax. It proposes to levy penalty taxes upon a small group of corporations, owned by one or a few individuals, in cases where the net income exceeds $50,000 and where less than 60 per cent of income is distributed. This is a clear case of employing the power to tax in order to discourage or prevent large industrialists from extending their business by reinvestment of earnings.

Representative Lamneck thinks that employment of the taxing power as now suggested would be unconstitutional. It is certainly a serious abuse of governmental strength to employ this power obliquely to achieve ends vaguely hinted at but never clearly defined. Only confusion, gross injustice and increasing instability can result from such ill-judged efforts to camouflage as revenue measures concealed attempts to cripple efficient business organizations against which no basis for a direct attack exists.

Premature Expansion.

A group of lawyers acting for the Senate has delivered the opinion that the Federal Home Loan Bank Board was within its rights in advancing $40,000 to the Group Health Association formed among its employes. This offsets, in some measure, the opposite opinion of the Comptroller General that the FHLBB acted "without authority of the law."

As regards the District government, however, GHA's position is in unrelieved confusion. The district attorney and the corporation counsel both doubt its compliance with the local code. At least one of their questions will probably soon be taken to court for settlement. In these circumstances, GHA's announcement that it will accept members from four outside Government offices seems a dubious move.

Such expansion, according to association leaders, would put it on a self-supporting basis. Against this is the probability that increased membership will also complicate the administrative aspects of the experiment. Moreover, blandly proceeding to expand prior to settlement of questions of legality may further antagonize opponents of GHA. And the association is too valuable as a sociological test tube to be shaken by unnecessary disputes.

The Democratic Way.

Those who heard Thursday night's radio debate between Assistant Attorney General Robert H. Jackson and Wendell L. Willkie, president of the Commonwealth & Southern Utilities Corporation, were treated to a striking example of the democratic tradition in practice.

Each of the viewpoints then presented on the problem of the relations of business and government has its strong partisans. The cheers and jeers from the visual audience which greeted every sally by the respective speakers bears this out. But more important than the arguments at this particular "Town Meeting of the Air" was the fact of the debate itself.

In many countries such give and take of opinion between a government official and an outstanding industrialist critical of governmental policies is today utterly out of the question. In those countries the government lays down the law and tolerates no criticism of its edicts, however ruinous.

Fortunately this state of affairs does not obtain among us. Both Mr. Jackson and Mr. Willkie are to be complimented for undertaking the debate, for the skill and vigor with which they presented their differing points of view and for the essential moderation of their respective speeches. But above all the American people can congratulate themselves that in our country such debates are possible.

As long as this is true, democracy is safe. Out of such clash of opinions comes a meeting of minds. It is the democratic way.

Minus One Bear.

It used to be a hopeful presumption that Lizzie Borden's record for unfilial behavior would never be topped. Back in the 90's, it may be remembered, that Fall River flapper "took an ax and gave her mother forty whacks; and when she saw what she had done, she gave her father forty-one."

Then along came a small Bolshevik a few weeks ago and blithely over-reached her. He won himself a pretty citation from the Kremlin, and for his father a nice trip to Siberia, by cold-bloodedly peaching on the latter for some un-Communistic activity.

The deodorant for that story is now at hand. From North Carolina comes the report that Joe Wilson, of Burnsville, having killed 113 bears, has quit hunting. Neither fear nor ennui lay behind his sudden decision. It was simply that he did not want to impair the record of his father, who killed 114 bears during his lifetime.

Here's family loyalty of a refreshing sort. But it is also good that Joe Wilson's action is sufficiently unusual to be classed as news. Recession would be the permanent and normal state if every son stopped short of his father's mark—except from the bear's point of view, of course.

"What are the people of this country coming to?" asks a writer. The answer is easy. They're eventually coming to the point where they will have tried all plans and panaceas in an unsuccessful effort to get something for nothing, and then they are going to have to roll up their sleeves and go to work for a living.

A sociologist says automobiles are making morons of the people. Maybe so, but the old law of compensation is getting in its dirty work: The morons are wrecking the automobiles.

A Harvard savant says men are fast reverting to apes. Unpremeditatively, a lot of us have been accustoming ourselves to the environmental change by being out on a limb most of the time.

"It is work which gives flavor to life."—Amiel. Uh-huh. Makes it pretty bitter, doesn't it?

There are too many people these days trying to save the world on a percentage basis.

Call For Boycott.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: For the past few weeks I have been trying to convince myself that we Americans are not losing that patriotism which once inspired our ancestors. Have we became so self-interested and so avaricious that the affairs of our Government, at home and abroad, are of little interest to us?

I was astounded at the attitude taken by the American public on the Panay bombing. "Something ought to be done about it," they say, and immediately change the subject to the stock market or something which concerns them more intimately. I will admit that there are small groups of patriotic women who have organized a boycott of Japanese toys, etc. However, the silk garments they wear pay for more destructive weapons than they would care to think about.

An effective boycott and a good strong threat is just reprisal for the outrages in the Orient coupled with certain spy activities on the West Coast. And while we are about it why not prohibit the sale of scrap metal which may kill more American sailors. A. P.

Detachable Envelopes?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The letter in your paper of December 28 headed "Conserving Christmas Cards" and signed by Guy Elliott Mitchell, attracted my attention.

His suggestion that the card publishers use a "detachable slip" for the name fails to include a "detachable" envelope as well. He will no doubt find that among the "multitude" of cards he received there was a "multitude" of shapes and sizes. A Christmas card sent in a misfit envelope tells its own story, not "faintly" but truly.

Liquor Licenses.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Commenting on the communication signed "Interested Taxpayer" in the forum of The Post of January 4, permit me to say that we agree, in principle, with the major part of the article. We favor a high license fee, we favor fewer licenses—all classes. Fewer licenses at a higher fee will tend to attract, perhaps, a higher type of businessman in the restaurant business where liquor is dispensed. At the present time many establishments take a Class C license knowing nothing about liquor or the fine art of mixing drinks. They employ any Tom, Dick or Harry who is unemployed, and their business is run in a hit or miss fashion. What's the result? Nobody profits—least of all labor.

A beer license costs only $200 a year. Beer is essential in most restaurants. For about 80 cents a day additional the restaurateur can obtain a class C license and dispense hard liquors. Result: Restaurants take class C licenses, satisfied if they can take in enough from the sale of hard liquor to pay the license. But they do not do enough business to employ professional bartenders. Nevertheless they do take enough business away from well-run, well-regulated restaurants to prohibit the improvement of labor conditions. CHARLES E. SANDS,

Executive Secretary, Bartenders Union "Old" 75.

Man At The Courthouse.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The President has from time to time requested fan mail as to the reaction to the latest New Dealisms, and co-operation with one's President should be the watchword of ture Americanism.

The man waiting for a traction relic at the courthouse thought so, too, for when the query was fired at him: "What do you think of Robert Jackson, latest in the train of recruits for the '1940 Prospects' title?" he shook off his abstraction and said with warmth:

"Just what I'd think of any diagnostician too fresh off the college assembly line. He still knows everything, including information upon the wickedness of big business inferentially closed to us lesser protoplasms. Before that first supposition becomes reality, a lot of people are going to suffer, the ones the New Deal goes weepy over getting tromped the worst."

He slapped his brief case against one leg with a "so that's that" air and intercepted the next in midair: "What about Mr. Ickes?"

"You've got me treed there, pal. If you like your rabble-rousing raw, you accept him—or use disinfected superlatives. After all, you figure, it's only politics—a strictly adult disorder you never let bother you as a kid—so why lose sleep about it? A country capable of such all-fired depressions has overcome plenty of obstacles before."

Perhaps some reader can tell me what was meant by that last remark. It sounds obscure.

Close The Court?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: With the retirement of Justice Sutherland, and with the retirement within the near future of several others of the Court the work of the New Dealers will have been accomplished and their objective attained.

With a Court that will soon be completely subservient to the whims and caprices of the Executive the last line of defense and protection of our rights and liberties will be gone.

In view of the fact that the Court has already almost ceased to function as a co-ordinate and independent part of the Government, and will soon be completely subordinated, the question is presented: Is there any reason or justification for its continued existence? It is a heavy expense to the overburdened taxpayer, and as it appears now to exist merely as an agency to approve and ratify the acts of the Executive and of Congress it could well be abolished with no loss to anyone.

The New Deal could at least give to the people this much relief by seeking its abolishment.

Italian Sarcasm.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Il Popolo d'Italia, publicity mouthpiece for Premier Mussolini, treats satirically of the great opposition fomented in this country relative to the Ludlow amendment. It fails at the same time to mention the one great virtue of democracy, that of free expression so exemplified in the current discussion over this affair. The article continues to say that on matters of grave importance the Government is hesitant to allow a national referendum and that, therefore, such a fact proves the fallaciousness of democratic rule and the inability of the masses to govern themselves. Such untutored remarks may sound well in a country devoid of free expression, but such is not true in democratic countries where the free speech and free press complex is prevalent.

Democratic governments, it is true, are much slower in their reactions than are governments represented by a totalitarian head, but when action does take place one may well be assured that it is more direct, more concentrated, more cooperative in its procedure, and apt to carry a much more stinging result.

Convert CCC Into Army Corps?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In the recent anniversary edition of The Post, among references to past events (1905), appeared the following:

". . . A leading Berlin newspaper had stirred a minor sensation by announcing that 'Americans are patriotic with their mouths, but are unwilling to become soldiers in behalf of their country.'"

William Jennings Bryan, noted pacifist, several years later, was widely quoted as saying that "in the event of war a million men would spring to arms overnight." Came the war and President Wilson called for 100,000 voluntary enlistments in one week. Contradicting Bryan's optimism, Wilson's call fell many thousands short.

Compulsory military service in foreign countries had been condemned by Americans, yet indifference to the danger of impending war made necessary the draft which was tantamount to compelling citizens to protect their own homes. But this was not condemned as compulsory military service as practiced by foreign nations.

A seven-year enlistment period to provide an Army reserve was made a law in 1912. Shortly after the war a national legislator gave a dinner to the American Reserve Army which was attended by about 50 reservists. Some reserve army!

Publicity was recently given to a plan by the War Department again recommending creation of an army reserve. With all due respect to its sincerity of purpose there is nothing to indicate that American attitude has changed and it would seem, in view of past experience, that an attempt to create an army reserve, however commendable, is doomed to failure.

After the war the Army was facing such rapid depletion that a plan to rehabilitate it was adopted at the suggestion of the late Secretary of War, Newton D. Baker. This took the form of vocational education and attracted thousands of young men as a powerful inducement to enlist. A horrified Congress, alarmed at the cost of that undertaking, eliminated it, thereby once more demobilizing the Army.

Absorption of the CCC by the Army, providing curricula in addition to public service and military training, will alleviate the unemployment problem and offer a military career for some of the personnel which would form a respectable nucleus of an army which an impending national emergency might necessitate.

The CCC is performing much useful and necessary work requiring great sums of money which, it is believed, is being judiciously expended. Maintenance of a standing army also is an economic and national necessity. By bringing the CCC within the jurisdiction of the Army, the combined appropriation would very likely be considerably less than the separate appropriations for each.

There is no reason to doubt that a large percentage of the unemployed today are young men who have recently attained employable age, inexperienced, and no work to absorb them. Under the Baker plan of 1919 these young men would be given an opportunity to learn a remunerative trade; to perform work now being done by the CCC and receive basic military training, which would be advantageous to both the Government and the individual, nor would it be detrimental to either.

After such an enlistment period those separated from the service, in whatever walk of life, would constitute a body of partially trained citizens who would more likely respond to a call to arms and take their places with the armed forces with minimum delay in entering actual combat, thereby providing a force so great as would bring hostilities to a rapid conclusion. In fact, beginning of hostilities would not be deferred in order to train recruits when, if experienced soldiers are available, a great potential army would perhaps tend to end a physical war before it starts.

Slum Clearance.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Slum clearance is a futile and ridiculous gesture.

A slum dwelling is one of the products of an inadequate income. Demolishing the dwelling does not increase the income of its occupant. Rather it forces him to seek another slum dwelling at the low rental he can afford and burdens him with the added expense of moving.

A sensible attack on the slum problem would be aimed at the cause rather than the effect and, lest we forget, the cause is inadequate income. W. B. TILLINGHAST.

Quiet Harvest.

A FRIEND remarked to me the other day on the astounding alacrity of book publishers. Hardly has an Arctic explorer or a round-the-world flier had time enough to be glad to be back when the presses begin to roll, and out comes his book. Some of the new books are almost uncanny in their timeliness (e. g., Foster Rhea Dulles' "Forty Years of American-Japanese Relationships," just published). Even the old-line "literary" magazines now fairly reek with timeliness, and the cut-and-dried magazine "article," which must be timely at all costs, has edged out the familiar essay, which had style and was as good next year as this.

All this insistent timeliness may have its benefits, but it nevertheless is very harrowing to anyone who seeks to waste not his reading time. It may perhaps be even brilliant, but so is the Christmas tree I am looking at as I write this, but I must throw it into the alley in a day or two.

So I shall extol what may be called the "quiet" book, and I have taken a sort of inventory of the "timeless" books that I read during 1937. It is a good thing occasionally to take stock of one's reading, and this is a "timely" time of year to do it.

First must be mentioned a two-volume work that has been a bedside delight for a whole year—"The Diary of Our Own Samuel Pepys," by Franklin P. Adams (F. P. A.), comprising nearly 25 years of "The Conning Tower," his distinguished column that ran successively in the New York Evening Mail, the New York Tribune, the New York World and the New York Herald Tribune.

In the total 1,300 pages there are few entries, even though perhaps speciously dated and trivial, that are not rendered timeless by the author's wisdom, wit and apt comment. On February 17, 1925, for example, he writes: "Very hard at my task, and sad to hear how Floyd Collins had died in Sand Cave, and the thought of the great hopes he must have had, to come to nought, very disturbing. Yet most of us are buried under some great boulder, though few know it; and some do imagine a bowlder there when in truth there is none."

Another "quiet" book, yet one of great gusto, is the first of a series of volumes on the rivers of America. It is called "Kennebec, Cradle of Americans," and was written by the Maine poet, Robert P. Tristram Coffin. It is a book of history, geography and poetry combined, and will be good reading a hundred years hence. The same author, earlier in the year, brought out another volume of his poems called "Saltwater Farm," which demonstrated in another way his great knowledge and love of his native State:

This is my country, bitter as the sea,
Pungent with fir and bayberry.
These are my people, saving of emotion,
With their eyes dipped in the Winter ocean.

Until last year few readers had heard of the New England ornithologist, William Brewster, but with the publication of two posthumous volumes of extracts from his journals, "October Farm" and "Concord River," he was happily introduced to a wide circle of readers, especially nature lovers. These books are filled with the tranquillity of nature—the songs of birds, the tracks of foxes, the beauty of snowstorms, woods smoke and the river.

They are almost too quiet, so far as man is concerned: On April 16, 1912, the day after the Titanic sank, Brewster wrote of two great blue herons that were flying unusually high and of a flight of Canada geese. "Rarely have I witnessed anything of the kind so impressive."

Essays, a genre of writing whose very nature is quietude, are perhaps the most leisurely of all reading matter. Because they get to the heart of things they are satisfying. Alan Devoe, a naturalist and essayist, has put a dozen of his essays into a book entitled "Phudd Hill." It is another quiet volume. It would be a good one to read after an hour in a traffic jam, for it is concerned with the joys of living in the country, about weather and its rural prognosticators, about moles and deer and woods.

Lord Grey of Fallodon once wrote: "It is the large still books that give the most abiding pleasure, but, if we are to read them and appreciate them, we must sometimes be still ourselves; we must reach that calm and contemplative mood which makes us receptive of the best things of literature." Still books, I believe, are indeed a great boon, for it is today a very essential thing to be, at least part of the time—

. . . a stranger to unrest
Like some deep stream that find its voiceless way
Amid the timorous haunts of all wild things.

The Anti-Lynching Bill.

SUDDEN DEATH is common in this country, where the automobile killed 38,000 last year and the homicide list normally amounts to around 12,000—a total just about equal to the roll of Americans who were killed or died of wounds in the big war. Yet, in the name of humanity, the work of the national Senate is being held up for another long, time-killing debate on a bill to provide penalties for lynchings, of which there were only eight in 1937.

PEGLER.

What is the urgency of this bill that it must take precedence over every other problem in a country which is just barely under control, anyway? And is any vice which has claimed fewer than 5,000 victims in 50 years and an average of less than 14 a year in the last decade deserving of such importance?

Lynching is a declining sport even in the South, where, 30 years ago, it was a matter of such familiar routine in the news that the press telegraph operators on the Southern leg devised an informal addition to the Phillips code, the XYZ sign, which mean "A posse is in pursuit of the Negro, and if caugght he will surely be lynched."

• • • •

IN RECENT YEARS the totals have fallen so low that to argue that lynching is a national concern is to persist blindly and obstructively in behalf of a mere contention. The reason for this bill has shrunk so small by now that, even allowing for revivals, as in the year 1933, when 28 were lynched, it is obvious that the evil is being cured by local processes.

Nevertheless, the proponents of the antilynching bill, undeterred by the filibuster in the recent special session and unimpressed by the importance of legislation bearing on the mess in which the country finds itself, insist on immediate action in the face of a threat by Southern Senators to talk it to death if it takes six months.

There is no doubt that prejudice rather than enlightened alarm over the constitutional questions of the bill is the reason for special objection by the Southern members.

To them and their constituents this bill proposes another Damyankee intrusion in their local affairs. It implies that the South is a barbarous land in need of special policing by the Federal Government, which left a very bad impression the last time it gave special attention to law and order in the South.

It would have no practical application in Maine or Vermont, which are not represented in the lynching statistics as far back as 1889, and other Northern States would be only slightly affected.

It contains the sly spirit of the South's own Jim Crow laws, which forbid white people to frequent certain quarters and thus segregate the Negro.

• • • •

ON THE OTHER HAND, it is hard to credit the advocates of the bill with entire sincerity. It has been used as a political bait in crowded Northern Negro centers, and it has, moreover, the support of those who deplore a lynching, but can always find reasons why the killings in the Russian purge are not individual tragedies, but mere incidents in the struggle of a great new nation beset on all sides by ruthless conspirators.

And I question the humanitarianism of any professional or semipro bleeding heart who clamors that not a single person must be allowed to hunger, but would stall the entire legislative program in a fight to ham through a law intended, at the most optimistic figure, to save 14 lives a year.

Actually it might not save any lives. The decline of lynching shows that the lives are being saved by a rising sense of responsibility in the Southern sheriff and other local causes, and, anyway, the prisoners might be convicted and executed.

This law would only prosecute and attempt to convict a negligent or cowardly sheriff and would impose financial liability up to $10,000 on the guilty county itself. And, like as not, Washington would then give the county the money to pay the indemnity.

To some of us in the North, the bill is an amusing revenge. Southern public opinion and Southern Statesmen 15 years ago were strong advocates of national prohibition as a means of keeping the Negro apart from the fo'-bit bottle of square face on Saturday nights and preserving their local peace. They were then ready to acknowledge the right of the Federal Government to suppress local habits of the North, much less harmful than the lynching custom, and they constantly urged the Government to reconstruct us according to their ideas.

Now, what is your name, please?

Gustav Erple.

What business are you in?

The same as you; I haven't done any work in years.

Where do you reside?

Since these quiz programs got to be such a feature I'm practically living in broadcasting booths.

Very well, Mr. Erple; here's your question: What river is named after the Polish Composer Pemmican?

Omsk.

Omsk is not a river.

I know it; but neither is Pemmican a composer.

• • • •

Next! What is your name?

Lydia Britz.

What do you do for a living?

I'm an interior decorator out of work.

How long have you been out of work?

Ever since my last customer saw what I did to his house.

Where do you reside?

I just hide wherever I think best between quiz hours.

Now, Miss Britz, if you had a terrapin would you play with it, eat it, wear it or ride on it?

I'd wear it.

I'm afraid you've flunked. A terrapin is a turtle and the idea of wearing a turtle is absurd.

Your name?

Asa Spudds.

It sounds like a card game. Your occupation?

I'm a sleigh striper.

I didn't know a sleigh striper could get work these modern days.

They can't; that's why I like it.

Here's your question, Spudds: Locate and describe Nanking and state what country it is in.

Nanking is the capital of Japan.

It is not in Japan.

Don't worry; it will be!

• • • •

Lemuel L. Lemuel.

What do you do when not on these quiz hours?

Oh, there are lots of other places where I can show my ignorance.

That must be very satisfying. Well, Lemuel, here's your question: If you had a whiffletree would you cook it, decorate a room with it, eat it or play a tune on it?

Play a tune on it.

From the sound of it a lot of those radio orchestras must be trying it anyhow.

Job Insurance

By Joel Underwood,

Special Correspondence of The Post.

Boston.

ALTHOUGH Massachusetts is not the only State which will pay out unemployment insurance benefits in 1938, it is one whose unemployment problem is of such a nature that the English experience with unemployment insurance between 1911 and 1931 may prove valuable. The chief parallel in the two situations is the danger of a chronic condition of unemployment not anticipated at the time when the insurance legislation was formulated. The chief lesson in the English experience in those years is the need for a stonewall resistance to efforts to burden the insurance administration with relief functions.

The Massachusetts statute provides for the payment of benefits in a ratio of 1 to 4; that is, the unemployed worker is entitled to receive one weekly payment for every four weeks of employment during which he has contributed to the pooled fund. A person who worked the whole 52 weeks in the year 1937 and who is otherwise eligible is entitled to benefit payments over a period of 13 weeks.

Since there is a preliminary waiting period of three weeks, a worker becoming unemployed on January 1, 1938, is not eligible to benefit payments until the beginning of the fourth week in January. Payment of his first benefit would not be due until the end of the first week in which he became eligible, and it is for this reason that the first payments in Massachusetts are not expected to be paid until February 1, 1938.

Benefits Figured As One-Half Of Weekly Wage.

THE BENEFITS themselves are one-half the average weekly wage of the unemployed worker. A person whose weekly wage for 52 weeks in 1927 was $18 would be eligible for weekly payments of $9 over a period of 13 weeks. If his total employed time at that wage in 1937 were 48 weeks, his $9 benefit would be paid for 12 weeks instead of 13, and a person who worked four weeks at $18 a week in 1937 would receive a single check for $9.

When benefits are exhausted, payments cease. The program does not, therefore, provide insurance, in a strict meaning of the term. It is a scheme for the accumulation of reserves for the well-known rainy day, a species of forced saving. The amount of benefits to be paid when unemployment comes is measured by the reserves and not the risk, as is the case in commercial insurance. Indeed, it may be doubted whether unemployment is an insurable risk at all, in the commercial sense.

The British unemployment insurance act of 1911 embodied the same formula. The machinery for the administration of the British act had been barely established, however, when England went to war. The mobilization of a large part of the labor market into the army and the accelerated demand for workers to meet the needs of an accelerated scale of production operated to reduce unemployment to a minimum. As a consequence, reserves to the amount of £22,500,000 were accumulated. Part of the reason for this massive reserve was the extension of the insurance act in 1916 to cover about 2,000,000 munitions workers. This virtually doubled the original coverage.

The armistice made it necessary to provide for the rehabilitation of the soldiers in industrial life. The problem was made more difficult by the need for shrinking wartime production budgets to fit peacetime production schedules. The soldiers, of course, had not been able to contribute to the unemployment insurance reserves. In order to mitigate the hardships of adjustment, therefore the benefit payment features of the program were supplemented by a program of out-of-work donations—a form of direct relief. This gratuity was discontinued for civilians in 1919 and for ex-soldiers in 1921.

Inclusion Of Ex-Soldiers Required 'Extended Benefits.'

IN THE LATTER year the coverage of the insurance program was extended to include a total of 11,500,000 workers. Unfortunately, a severe and protracted depression set in simultaneously and within a year the war surpluses had been exhausted in benefit payments. The pretense of maintaining a fixed ratio between contributions and payments was virtually abandoned. The out-of-work donation of 1918 was really the dole disguised, as were the device of "extended benefits" in 1921 and the scheme for the distribution of "transitional payments" in 1924. Borrowing was resorted to in order to meet these extra obligations, and the reserve fund became that magical pitcher of Philemon and Baucis, pouring out more than it held.

The 20 statutes relating to unemployment insurance which were passed by Parliament between 1920 and 1930 did little more than tinker with the administration of the original act. A major operation of legislative surgery was necessary to cut from the insurance program the tumorous tissues of the dole.

The national economy act of 1931 made this reform possible. It authorized the national government to effect economies in specified services, including unemployment insurance. Two orders in council resulted in an estimated saving to the exchequer of £16,000,000 and the elimination of 171,000 persons from the live register of the labor exchanges between October, 1931, and March, 1932. Those eliminated were provided for otherwise than through the insurance hierarchy. The new arrangements represented a separation of the functions of insurance and maintenance and provided separately for their administration.

Problem Seen Complicated By Shoe, Textile Industries.

THE PRESENT situation in Massachusetts is not unlike that which prevailed in Great Britain at the close of the war. One of the most serious problems here is the rehabilitation of unemployed workers in the textile and shoe centers. If new industries were in prospect and if there were any assurance that the maladies of the textile and shoe industries were merely temporary and not chronic, the future of the unemployed worker would not be as gloomy as it is.

The figures recently released by the National Unemployment Census, approximate as they are, indicate that on the date of the census, the percentage of unemployment in Massachusetts was higher than the average for the country. It was higher than that of any other New England State except Rhode Island which is also suffering from the plight of the textile industry in the North.

The results indicate that 327,619 persons, or almost a third of a million of the Commonwealth's four and one-half million people, were either out of work or on some form of relief on the date of the census. If each of the 327,619 persons indicated has three dependents, the figures mean that some 1,308,000 people in the State are dependent upon public support. In briefer and more approximate figures, every five people in Massachusetts support not only themselves but two others also, either personally or through the agency of the State.

The mistake of the British between 1911 and 1931 was the belief that the large degree of unemployment was a transitory industrial disorder which would more or less quickly pass. The remedies used therefore were of a patchy and makeshift character. Not until it became apparent in 1931 that the whole of British industry needed resuscitation were comprehensive measures employed.

With two limping major industries and little immediate prospect of new ones, the unemployment problem in Massachusetts is likely to require heroic treatment. If the unemployment insurance program is not to become farcical, care will have to be taken to avoid converting it into an agency for the administration of direct relief through such thinly disguised subterfuges as extended benefit payments. When the rejection of fixed ratios between contributions and payments comes in the door, solvency flies out the window.

Insurance and relief are addressed to two entirely different problems and nowhere is that truism more worth remembering than in Massachusetts. The concern of the first is the man who loafs occasionally. The concern of the second is the man who works occasionally. Good government advises that the distinction be observed.

Canadian 'Red Squad' Seizes Labor's Books

Montreal, Jan. 7 (Canadian Press).—The "red squad" of Quebec provincial police has seized 800 books in a raid on the headquarters of the Canadian Labor Circle, it was disclosed today. The raid was made last week-end. Officers of the association describe the organization as the "largest non-political Jewish organization in Canada."

In Britain, Too

By Barnet Nover.

The Recession Abroad.

FOR FOUR successive months British unemployment figures have steadily gone up. In September the total stood at 1,271,000. But by mid-December, according to figures just published by the Ministry of Labor, the number had risen to 1,665,000, an increase of close to 400,000.

In themselves these figures are not particularly startling. A seasonal decline in employment usually occurs in Great Britain during the fall and early winter months. Moreover, the present unemployment figures contrast very favorably with the total of close to 3,000,000 recorded at the height of the depression.

Yet not without reason are the British alarmed by the rise in the number of workless that has occurred since last summer. For this rise, in the first place, is decidedly more than seasonal. Secondly, it represents a reversal of the trend toward decreased unemployment that began with the industrial boom of 1933. And, last but not least, the increase in unemployment is particularly disturbing because it comes at a time when the government is spending vast sums for rearmament.

• • • •

NO WONDER, then, that the more pessimistic Englishmen are beginning to wonder whether the boom is now on the way out, regardless of the rearmament program which calls for an expenditure of no less than $7,500,000,000 over a five-year period.

This feeling is intensified by the circumstance that the present decline in unemployment is limited neither to any area nor to any particular industry or group of industries in Great Britain. All of them are, in one degree or another, beginning to feel the pinch of an incipient recession which may and may not become worse as time goes on.

Nor is Great Britain the only European nation to feel that way. Elsewhere on the continent the last few months have seen a growth of pessimism regarding the economic outlook. Countries, such as Sweden, that not long ago were basking in the warm sun of a remarkable prosperity, are beginning to feel, though still faintly, the chill of hard times. And with the sharp decline that has occurred in world commodity prices, agricultural as well as industrial, countries are becoming dubious of the outlook for the near future.

• • • •

THE GENERAL picture is clearly brought out in the index of world production of the League of Nations. That shows a decline from 106.8 in May (1929 equals 100) to 101.4 in September—this despite the staggering race in armaments. At the same time the League's index of world trade dropped from 100 for the second quarter of 1937 to 97.1 for the third quarter, with the likelihood of a further decline since then.

The interesting point about these figures is that they clearly indicate that the present recession is by no means confined to the United States, although in this country the index of production has undoubtedly fallen faster and more spectacularly than elsewhere in the world. From this it can be deduced, with some qualifications, of course, that the political regimes and the economic systems obtaining in the various nations of the world have an only secondary bearing on their prosperity or their lack of it. The economic eggs of New Deal America, semi-Socialist Sweden, conservative Britain, Fascist Italy and the dictator-dominated republics of Latin America are all in the same world basket.

• • • •

BECAUSE the United States is the most important single economic unity the economic trend in this Nation to a very remarkable degree affects the economic trend everywhere else in the world.

As the London Economist points out in a recent issue:

"The course of world economic events has taken an unfavorable turn, largely as the result of the sharp recession in the United States."

On the other hand, the present recession abroad, particularly if it achieves any momentum, is certain to have an unfavorable bearing on our economy and especially on our export industries and our producers of raw materials and foodstuffs who have to dispose of part of their surplus abroad.

To cite but one example of this interlocking relationship: The decline in the production of automobiles in this country is certain to lead to a reduction in our imports of rubber, of which raw material we are the outstanding market. That will adversely affect the rubber producers of Malaya and the Dutch East Indies. In turn, they will be forced to curtail their purchases of, say, cotton goods from Britain. Thus Britain will be unable to buy as much of our cotton as heretofore. And so on.

• • • •

THE PICTURE is a depressing one. But the consensus abroad, including England, appears to be that the present recession is only temporary and that before it goes very much further the forces making for recovery will have another inning.

In the meantime, so far as Great Britain is concerned, the cumulative signs that the boom is subsiding are certain to strengthen the belief in the wisdom of concluding a reciprocal trade pact with the United States. No nation alone, it is coming to be recognized, can lift itself up by its bootstraps even if these bootstraps are in the form of battleships, cannon and bombing planes. But a widening of the channels of trade may help. It is with this in mind that the British authorities, long hostile to Mr. Hull's program, are now prepared to enter upon the second stage in the negotiations with this country for a larger flow of goods between the two nations.

Future Of America

By Col. Edward M. House.

Leader In Emergency.

WHEN THE PRESIDENT made his famous "quarantine" speech at Chicago last October, the immediate result was the calling of the Nine-Power Conference at Brussels, and the attendance thereat of Norman H. Davis, the American ambassador-at-large.

Despite the broadside of criticism directed at the meeting for its apparent futility, I do not consider that it was a failure. Naturally I hoped that it would have better immediate results. But what happened there of real importance was this: The powers honestly desirous of peace now realize that matters of protocol and other minor differences must be set aside. They understand more completely the need of a united front, and, what is more important, of a high command perhaps similar to that accorded Marshal Foch at the darkest moment of the World War. If a great war breaks soon, this command might eventually be passed to the United States.

• • • •

JAPAN, Germany and Italy as result of the Brussels meeting, will, I believe, gradually begin to feel that a forward march has its final limits when that march treads upon the property and persons of others.

But time is all important. The year that is passing has been full of alarms. The year 1938 may be the turning point, for better or for worse.

Unfortunately the powers with war aims received their impetus from the conviction that neither Great Britain nor the United States would rouse themselves from the placidity that descended upon them following the World War. John Bull is now aroused. The moment Italy flouted him in the Mediterranean two years ago may yet be inscribed as the beginning of the end of the Italian dream of empire. The British war machine is now working double shift, not for the purpose of waging war but of enforcing peace. Events in China have only inspired the British to even greater efforts. Britain simply will not be downed.

• • • •

BLOWS similar to those struck British prestige that awakened and inspired the nation already are beginning to touch the United States. In this present world uncertainty it is entirely possible that a major unforgivable one may be struck at any moment. In that case I am sure that, overnight, America will take a position commensurate with her dignity as a world power.

Tom McCarthy

What A Young Prize Fighter Thinks About.

FOR ABOUT four minutes the little fellow with the light hair had been jumping around the improvised ring, puffing and snorting, and pawing in the air. Then the manager passed the heavy gloves across the ropes, and the boys began to go at it.

McCARTHY.

They worked faster than they ever do in the ring, because with the pillow-like gloves you couldn't get hurt . . . at least, not much. And the boys playing pool dropped their cues and stood around the roped-off corner of the gym.

There wasn't much sound in the big airless room, except for the slap of the gloves and the hard breathing of the boys in the improvised ring. They were lightweights, and they went at each other like a couple of snarling cats. The light-haired boy was named Ray Ingram, and the other fighter was Joey Green.

It looked pretty serious for a while as lefts bopped on chins, and they played off the ropes as though their life depended on it. And nobody smiled or yelled, and it looked the real McCoy, except for the gloves, and Joey Green's "Sorry Ray! Did I get you in the eye?"

And after it was over and the boys had climbed into flannel robes to "sweat it out," the other guys went back to the pool table, and one guy in swimming pants slugged away at the athletic club's heavy bag.

The Athletic Club on the sixth floor of a down town office building. It's just a big room, poorly lighted through unwashed windows. And the boys in the game, and some of the younger hangers-on, gather there to spend the afternoon. It's called an athletic club . . . but it's not country club stuff. It's cauliflower row.

There you'll find ham-and-eggers and preliminary boys, has-beens and "comers." They drop in to shoot a game of pool and work out. And after pounding each other for a couple of rounds, they flop on the oilcloth-covered rubbing table and sweat. And once in a while, maybe, they think.

And the has-beens and ham-and-eggers mostly remember. And the "comers"—the young guys in the boxing game—look ahead. So I asked Georgie Abrams what he thought about, what he wanted to get out of the game, because George is a comer. He's been a professional boxer only since last May. But the local ring reporters say that he's the best middleweight this district has produced in past remembering. He is the local "Golden Boy."

• • • •

"I'D LIKE to buy a house," Georgie said, and he pulled himself up to a sitting position. He'd been lying on the oilcloth-covered rubbing table.

"I'd like to get Mom and I fixed up for life. You know, a trust fund or something like that. Then I'd like to quit, and get a job as a cartoonist." And George's ambition isn't dizzy either. He really can draw. He draws things he knows, like prize fighters and pretty girls. But the likeness is good and the lines are sure.

"How did I get into this game? Well, you know I've boxed amateur since I was 14. Then last May I turned pro. I'm 19 now." Georgie had to cut out talking then, because at that moment one of the boys brought around a hot water bottle to put on his back. He'd strained something or other back there, exercising.

"But I still like that cartoonist idea," he said. "I like to draw. I'm not in the ring because I get a kick out of it. I want—well, people like to have enough dough so they don't have to worry. Then, maybe I'll try to be a cartoonist." He looked down at his hands, small hands, not the hands of a fighter.

"Fun? Well, there's fun in this once in a while. But not like you might think. I climb into the ring. I feel the guy out in the opening rounds, and then I go to work. So far I've been lucky. I've won.

"But the crowd roar isn't so much. You can hear it vaguely, but it doesn't mean much. It's sort of like when you look up and see the big 'No Smoking' sign over at the side of the hall. It's there, and it doesn't have much to do with you.

"I never really get nervous, unless some friend of mine is fighting somebody else. Then I don't like to look at it. And I don't feel a whole lot when I'm in the ring . . . even anger. I guess I've only been mad once.

"That time the guy was playing dirty in the clinches . . . workin' on my face with his gloves. Just rubbin' away to make it raw. That time, I hit him with a left which grazed his chin and followed through with my elbow. That was dirty. But he started it.

"But I don't get sore. I just go in and try to use my head. I want to get along in this game."

"Do you ever get scared you'll really hurt yourself—or maybe end up like some of these boys . . . walkin' on your heels?" I asked him.

"Naw," he said. "I don't think you need to do that if you use your head." And then he leaned over and knocked on wood.

• • • •

HE'S 19 years old, and his name is George Abrams, and they say he's a comer. He weighs a little more than 150 pounds, and he has sturdy legs, sloping shoulders and deep-set eyes.

He acts and talks like the average kid of 19, except that he seems to know the score a little better. He's got a slow laugh, and a broken nose, and the small hands of an artist. But he's not afraid and he doesn't get nervous. And some day he's going to have a house and some dough, and then maybe go to work for a newspaper.

He's going to have all those things if he wins his fight at the arena next Monday night, and then the one after that—and others down the line. And if—knock on wood—he doesn't get hurt or hit too much.

Leaders Prepare Guillotine Monday For Ludlow Bill

By the Associated Press.

Administration forces in the House began a concerted effort yesterday to defeat the Ludlow war referendum amendment quickly when it comes up for debate Monday.

Speaker Bankhead, Chairman O'Connor (Democrat), New York, of the House Rules Committee and Chairman Sumners (Democrat), of Texas, of the House Judiciary Committee argued that the proposal to require a popular referendum before the United States could declare war would handicap the State Department's foreign policies.

The first test will come Monday on a vote to affirm the action of 218 members who signed a petition to wrest the resolution from the House Judiciary Committee which has been considering it for 18 months.

Should the Administration muster a majority of 218 members against the motion to discharge the committee, the proposal would be killed.

Burlew Hearings To Begin Tuesday

By the Associated Press.

The Senate Public Lands Committee agreed yesterday to begin hearings Tuesday on President Roosevelt's nomination of E. K. Burlew as First Assistant Secretary of Interior.

The President nominated Burlew, a Pennsylvanian who had been administrative assistant to Secretary Ickes, after Western Senators urged him to name a Westerner to succeed the late T. A. Walters, of Idaho.

McCarran said the committee would request Ickes and Burlew to appear at the hearing along with other witnesses.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Why Should Her Best Friends Be More Popular Than She, When They're No More Attractive, Girl Asks.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a junior in high school, 16 years old, and am not to be classified as either good looking, cute, pretty, sophisticated or what-have-you. But I can be neat looking and generally am. I wear respectable looking clothes and get a good many hand-outs from the family in this line. My question is the old, old story: Why am I not so popular as other girls who seemingly don't have any more personality than I have?

* * * *

I have quite a number of girl friends, but not very many close ones. I am in a club and hold a quite high office and therefore thought I must be in pretty good standing with the girls, but lately I have heard a few thing that have hurt me quite badly. Not about me; but such things as one of the girls giving a party and inviting some of my best friends without inviting me. Naturally that hurt. One of my best friends is going away to college now and so I really don't have anyone to confide in any more. Some of my other close friends go to other schools and so I don't see them except on Sunday and for club meetings.

* * * *

I go around with two girls constantly at school, one more than the other, perhaps, but this is because I live nearer the second than the first. Lately I have been called a "stooge" for the second girl, simply because we are constantly seen together, but I don't think that I am, because I don't try to do a thing like she does, and lately, since this was brought to my attention, I have been particularly watchful on the point.

* * * *

Since the holidays I've been blue, but I've covered it up and had a good time part of the time. I go around with a few college boys during the holidays but generally with the crowd. Occasionally one of them comes to see me at my home, but then it is not THE one. During the time they aren't home I don't have much fun. I kind of live from one holiday to the next. Sometimes I have dates, but not often. I work after school and on Saturdays and so I don't have any time to join clubs at school or such. I was in a few but had to drop out of them this year.

* * * *

I have found out that at Easter time, the boys who are away at school won't be home and I dread the thought, because it is one time of year I had looked forward to. I can't afford to give a big party and get all my friends together, and, anyway, my place isn't big enough for such an affair. I'm not looking for pity because I hate people that are always wanting pity, but I would like some good sound advice if you can give me any on the strength of what I have told you. Anything you can say will be helpful. Thank you. WAITING.

What to Believe.

DEAR WAITING: In my opinion, you are making mountains out of molehills. You are worrying about trifles that aren't worth a second thought. Your whole trouble, if any, is an introspective tendency to attach undue importance to things that don't matter in the least; that would scarcely by noticed by a girl with a more happy-go-lucky temperament. You don't realize, apparently, that you are having a perfectly normal social experience. You have many acquaintances, a few close friends, a few fair-weather beaux, and a certain assured place in the social life of your contemporaries—and still you would count this all for naught merely because you are not one of the most popular girls in the group. Few, indeed, in this world, are the really popular people. Yet happy indeed are those average citizens who have the good sense to waste no energies sorrowing for what they have not, but who prefer, instead, to give thanks for that which they have.

* * * *

Envy and jealousy are inimical alike to happiness and to pleasing personality. And whether you realize it or not, you are incipiently ailing with both these subversive emotions. If you had ever tasted the bitterness of being a complete "washout," socially; of being a female nonentity who had no standing with her own sex, who had never been invited to club membership, much less been elected to "high office" in such a close corporation, who hadn't a boy friend to her name, who was never asked to go places and do things in mixed company during the holidays; who had no girl chums; then you would appreciate how richly you are blessed with friendship today. With much to be thankful for, and nothing in particular to complain about, you have to invent misery for yourself by envying the lot of the few who thus early in life have outstripped you in social popularity.

* * * *

It's sheer, inexcusable hypersensitivity to get "hurt" because one isn't invited to all the parties one's "best friends" are asked to. And it's equally absurd to brood over casual remarks made by thoughtless persons (who usually forget such remarks as soon as they are made, and who don't mean anything in particular by saying them in the first place) about one's conduct or one's personality or one's intimate relationships. It's a universal habit of womenfolk to talk at random about nearly everything that comes to their attention, and the girl who called you a "stooge" to your best friend probably would be hard put to explain what she meant if asked. Even if she did know what she was trying to say, still, the fact that she said it—so long as it isn't true—shouldn't make any difference to you. And it wouldn't if you were a well-adjusted person. You and your best friend might laugh about it together; might shoot an equally meaningless barb back in her direction, about some real or fancied idiosyncrasy of hers; but you would have forgotten the whole business in a week at the latest.

* * * *

Although you may suppose that your personality is equally as dynamic as that of your more popular girl friends, nevertheless I am inclined to doubt it. There is a certain shrinking sense of inferiority evident in your precautionary efforts not to act the part of a "stooge," since hearing yourself called a "stooge." Personality is possessed by the person who is intelligent, who has a happy disposition and a sound of sense of humor, and who dares to be his natural, unaffected self; who is, in other words, completely and serenely poised. Now, if this girl's remark causes you to revise your attitude to your bosom friend, you reveal yourself as lacking that poise which is a concomitant of compelling personality. You show yourself to be, in some ways, a weak sister; ready to trim her sail to every chance wind that blows; a person too eager to please everybody, and hence pleasing nobody. In hoping to be, and trying to be, all things to all people, you fail to register that individuality of selfhood which would invest you with real personality.

* * * *

However, there is nothing wrong with you that time won't cure. Right now, you are living through that phase of personal evolution known vaguely as "adolescence." For sensitive persons of potentially great reach—mentally and spiritually—this period is almost inevitably beset with such vague woes and worries as now trouble you. You are simply becoming aware of yourself in relation to your social environment and associates, and are wretchedly dissatisfied with what you find and what you see—both in yourself and others. And that, as a rule, is all to the good. If you passed through this period without agonizing in just such ways as you are agonizing, it would mean you were pretty much of a clod, and that you'd grow up to be a pretty dull woman.

* * * *

If I were you, I'd resume as much club work as I possibly could—as much as time and your spending money will permit; and I'd forget myself as much as possible in self-developing activities, such as learning how to dance superbly, how to swim and dive like a champion, how to play first-class tennis and golf, and so on; and I'd look about for some kind of hobby—music, painting or wood carving, or photography. You're wasting energy worrying that could be, and should be, and was meant to be, spent in more fruitful and constructive ways.

'Bed Sweaters' Offered Leisurely Breakfasters

If you have the leisurely habit of breakfasting in bed, there are some new sweater-like jackets of silk and wool, shirred on lastex, which are the last word in comfort and chic.

They are long of sleeve and high of neck, and come in delicate shades, such as aqua and tea rose. They are also suitable for invalids and convalescents, these "bed sweaters."

Featuring the Upswept Coiffure

THE UPSWEPT coiffures sketched here were created by Emile, of Washington, and show advanced trends for spring and summer. Below is a hair styling designed for the person with round or oval face and short neck; large, flat curls are piled on top and softly swirled around head. At right is a coiffure for the long face and neck; sculptured curls at side break the long lines of profile.

Drastic Change in Coiffure Good Way to Start New Year

By Ethel Ehlen,
The Post Fashion Editor.

START THE YEAR 1938 with a drastic change in coiffure. There is no better way to dramatize your personality and give a lift to your midseason wardrobe than a complete change in hair styling. According to Emile of Washington, the current upsweeping trend in hair-dos is one of the most graceful, chic and feminine of hair stylings that has ever been in vogue. When asked if the style could be worn by everyone, this authority explained it could be, with variations. "For instance," he said, "the person with a long thin face and neck can have curls added to the side of the head to break the long lines, and for those women who have round faces and short necks, there is a combination upswept and swirled coiffure."

There is also another and most important compromise in the popular "up coiffures," according to Emile. It is the hair-do that can be worn for formal evening and then easily adjusted by the wearer for daytime. This should be good news to the great majority of women (ourselves included), who have spent hours getting a startling coiffure for evening, and then found that it not only did not harmonize with daytime clothes, but could not be worn with hats of any kind. The way to remedy that situation, says Emile, is an evening coiffure in which the upswept curls may be brushed down farther on the neck and then curled up for day wear.

Ears Are Exposed.

In changing to the "up coiffure," Emile commented, the main feature objected to at first by many women is the exposing of the ears. "Coiffures are not only neater and smarter when all or part of the ears are exposed," he said, "but are really more becoming than the old styles that sponsored covering them; it is all in getting accustomed to the drastic change." Sculptured curls that are large and flat have taken the place of the small, tight corkscrew-like curls of other seasons. It is all a definite 1900 influence and delightfully in keeping with the trends in fashion. "The upsweeping coiffure with its quaintly modern charm is 'ageless.'" Emile explained with enthusiasm, being equally as effective and smart, for the young girl as for the grandmother."

A clever and economical way to add glamour to an ensemble, Emile volunteered, is to choose conservative clothes of good lines, and then top them with dramatic hair-dos. In other words, to be meticulously groomed and not give all the attention to clothes and too little to the hair, nails and complexion. And here is a tip for the young business or career woman looking for romance. According to Emile, "a man notices a woman's hair and face first, therefore she should be well-groomed at all times." To stress further the importance of those tremendous trifles, Emile quoted what he said was a popular French saying: "Une femme bien coiffe'e et bien chausse'e est une femme bien hebille'e." Which means in effect, he explained, that a woman who was well-groomed and well-shod was considered well-dressed.

The spring millinery and in fact the entire spring silhouette is being styled to harmonize with the upsweeping coiffure, according to reports from both Paris and this side of the Atlantic. No longer will it be necessary to top a startling new brushed-up hair-do with a hat that looks as though it didn't belong to the costume. It is not only clever to change your hair styling for 1938, but imperative, if you want to look modern and in step with the mode. Since this styling can be adapted to everyone with smart effect, there should be no qualms about looking ridiculous. You won't, if you allow an experienced hair-dresser to diagnose your type and then plan the coiffure accordingly.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes

New York, Jan. 7.

OUR CHANGE of ambassadors to Berlin has not only brought back to our shores the professorial diplomat, William E. Dodd, but his bright, attractive and colorful daughter, Martha, who at 29 is re-embarking on a literary career, after four and a half years of being what she calls "just a diplomat's daughter."

ALICE HUGHES.

Martha had made a modest start as a writer before the Dodd family went to Germany, but she tells me she feels the long hiatus has not been wasted. "I traveled a lot—saw almost all of Europe," she says. And goodness knows that is no handicap to a girl who yearns to put words on paper.

So Miss Martha is starting her life at the typewriter all over again and with a great deal more to say than when she went with her father and mother to the Third Reich. In fact, she has already started her first elaborate literary chore, a book about Germany as it is today under Nazi rule.

It may be said, here, that Martha doesn't care much about fascism in any form, though her remarks are temperate, wise and guarded. However, she says she will pull no punches in the book on which she has embarked. "In the book I can come right out and say what I think about fascism," is the way she puts it, and that is undoubtedly true. There is something remote and comforting about opinions expressed between board covers!

Just at the moment, however, Martha Dodd's first concern is to find a job here, for she has to make a living. She's looking for a part-time stint, which will permit her to work on this cherished tome, which she actually burns to get safely down on paper. She's a smart girl, this daughter of the Dodds, and some employer here will be lucky to get her. And she'll write, and write and write!

* * * *

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—It was bound to happen—a "Shirley Temple of the Silver Blades" was bound to appear in the midst of New York's current skate frenzy. And she has, in the person of Miss Irene Davidson, all of five, with dimples, curls, dark eyes and highly educated feet. This tike is doing amazing figure skating as part of the ice entertainment at one of our big hotels. She's the daughter of Harry and Violet Davidson, of St. Paul, Minn., and of course, mother came with her. A likable child, with none of the unpleasant features of precocity, and by the time this is written she will be back at school in St. Paul. But she delighted thousands during her brief stay in our midst . . .

The Metropolitan unleashed another opera revival the night before last—this time Richard Strauss' "Elektra." It brought still another debut, in the person of Rosa Pauly, an exciting dramatic soprano from Hungary. The Met is exceptionally exciting this season, with the new singers and the new presentations of music dramas not heard for years on the sturdy old stage at Broadway and Thirty-ninth street.

Went to a very fancy tea party the other day for Anatol Litvak, the film creator who directed "Tovarich" and "Mayerling" and is the bridegroom of Miriam Hopkins, whom he left ailing in a Philadelphia hospital. Litvak thinks the fine French film, "Mayerling," is the best thing he has ever done and raves about Danielle Darrieux, the little French beauty who played opposite Charles Boyer in it and is now brightening the landscape in Hollywood . . . His only fear is that too much petting will spoil the angel child . . .

Speaking of pictures, my biggest treat recently was seeing Walt Disney's first long film, "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," in a projection room. This is a picture that will delight grownups quite as much as the children, so don't think of sending Jane and Junior without tagging along yourselves!

The current scourge of parties has been a mighty boon and blessing to our florists—never have I seen so many fresh flowers worn by the ladies. Moreover, they seemed to wear the whole jewel case, to have their hair fancier than ever in history and to go the limit on nail polish. These delightful orgies have been the richest and most colorful I've ever seen. Sign of the times, again!

Pleasant Homes

Suggestions for the use of new materials as well as new ways in using old material is the subject of an interview with a famous decorator, Joseph Mullen, which Elizabeth MacRae Boykin writes about in her article tomorrow. Here you will find many ideas that the woman of limited means who must do her own decorating can follow through—ideas straight from one of the men who creates style in home furnishings. YOUR FIGURE, MADAME!

Bulgy Midsection an Unnecessary Sign of Middle Age.

By Ida Jean Kain.

WE GROW old by inches, not by years . . . and we grow old first in the middle of our figures. Age in itself does not change the figure. It's what we let happen over a period of years that does the damage.

In the youthful figure there is a clearly defined waistline with an 8 and 10-inch difference between the bust and waist measurements, but how quickly this difference diminishes! In the mature figure the average difference between the two measurements is around 5 inches. So it is the thick, stodgy midsection that suggests maturity, and the figure that is slim and supple as a willow wand is the figure of youth.

Exercises Given.

There is no physiological reason for this excess waistline padding. Of all the measurements, the waistline is the most malleable, and if it is susceptible to fat, the same is true of exercise. With exercises which stretch and squeeze the waist, you can easily slim an inch off a pudgy waist in two weeks. Today's streamline measure makes an excellent beginning for your 1938 figure program. Check your interpretation of this exercise by the following description:

POSITION: Standing on one knee, other leg stretched straight out from the side, arms raised high overhead.

MOVEMENT: Continue the upward stretch of the body and bend at the waist in the same direction as the outstretched leg. Repeat five times on one side, then change position so as to bend in the other direction.

With a thickening waist there is usually a tendency to flabbiness of the abdominal muscles, which allows the tummy to protrude. I am sorry to tell you, but it is not as easy to discipline this front line. Unremitting exercise is needed to firm the tummy muscles, but the following exercise will help to pull those lazy muscles back into line:

Try this, to slim an inch off a pudgy waist.

MOVEMENT: Keeping the small of the back against the wall, slide down until you are in a squatting position. Repeat the exercise six times, always keeping the small of the back against the wall. This requires special effort on the part of the lower abdominal muscles and is effective in firming the abdominal girdle.

With a daily program of waistline exercise you can keep those inches in check and have a figure that is flexible and slim regardless of your age.

TODAY'S HEALTH TALK

by Logan Clendening, M. D.

WE ARE WARNED about neglecting colds. About all that means is to emphasize the advice given here a few days ago—to stay in bed the first day or so of a cold. That is all that can be done to safeguard against complications and serious sequels. We hear also that a neglected cold will "run into pneumonia." I do not believe that, either. If a cold runs into pneumonia, it was pneumonia from the beginning, but in that case the temperature is likely to be high and, therefore, all the more should it be emphasized that if the temperature is up to or over a hundred with what looks like a cold, go to bed absolutely, even if it keeps you from getting married or being inaugurated President.

We hear so often, in going over the stories patients tell, such a statement as "I had a little cold." Well, what that means is that it felt like a cold—sensations of fever, and muscle aches and chilliness are common to lots of conditions from diphtheria and pleurisy and pneumonia in the early stages, to rheumatism and general infections. There is a tendency to call every upset at this time of year a cold, and the go-to-bed injunction is all the more necessary.

Hangover Cold Problem.

As for such complications as sinus infection and middle ear infection after colds, they must be watched for—the middle ear infection especially in children—but they are more likely to be caused by overtreatment than a let-alone policy in the acute stage of the cold.

Two problems come up about these respiratory infections. One is the hangover cold. The one you can't shake off. A very valued friend of mine, Dr. I. J. Wolf, several years ago described a condition which his colleagues have named "Wolf's disease." Its main character is that the patient doesn't get well until he goes to a warm climate. It starts as an ordinary cold, then hangs on in the chest as a bronchitis, and nothing seems to do it any good. After a change to a warm climate, it clears up in about a week. In the present age of automobile traveling, this is a practical prescription, because nearly everybody but the heads of big business and property owners can get away for the winter.

Colds that come back three or four or five times in a season are usually not colds at all. They are sinus infections that keep flaring up all through the cold weather. Or else chronic infection of the tonsils that lead to a regular succession of sore throats.

Chronic sinus infection may finally lead to chronic bronchitis. And this really makes the victim miserable in the winter time.

These people are unfortunately and undeservedly likely to be jokes to others—they are very sensitive to drafts, and constantly complaining that they are catching cold. In fact, they are more or less miserable all the time through the cold weather, and are happy only in the summer. They have a constant infection in the bronchial tubes which lights up in new places all the time under the influence of drafts. The answer to this problem also is to go to a warm climate.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Seven pamphlets by Dr. Clendening can now be obtained by sending 10 cents in coin, for each, and a self-addressed envelope with a 3-cent stamp, to Dr. Logan Clendening, in care of this paper. The pamphlets are: "Three Weeks' Reducing Diet." "Indigestion and Constipation." "Reducing and Gaining." "Infant Feeding." "Instructions for the Treatment of Diabetes." "Feminine Hygiene" and "The Care of the Hair and Skin."

Calling Cards Play Important Role in Capital

It Is Correct to Leave Them and Depart Even if Hostess Is Home.

By Margaret Wallace

THE CUSTOM of leaving calling cards is one that is strictly observed by those who wish to follow the rules of good form, in Washington. Official and diplomatic circles must observe this custom as part of their official duty. The wife of an official or member of Congress as helpmate to her husband has as one of her very first and most important duties the making out of her calling list, checking those who have left cards for her, and informing herself who should call on who in Washington and who should call first and how the call should be returned.

The first rule is that women leave cards for women only, even when calling at the White House. Men should leave cards for both the men and women of the family. While there is a rule that a card must be left by the woman caller for every woman in the family and for all the women guests in the house and that men leave cards for the men of the house—hold as well as the women, common sense and custom have decreed that not more than three cards of one kind should be left at any house.

Have Cards Ready.

A caller should have cards ready to present to the servant when the door is opened. It is very bad form and also very awkward to "fumble" about in the card case or purse for a card while the servant waits. If a member of the family comes to the door the caller has no choice but to accept the invitation to come in, and of course does not present the card to the member of the family but places it on the hall table—or on the card tray if one is provided.

It is quite proper in Washington to leave cards with the servant at the door without expecting to see those on whom the call is being made. If it is a day or hour when the hostess makes it a custom to be at home or if she is giving an at-home or reception of course the caller must go in. It the at-home or reception is one to which the guests have been formally invited, the caller ignores the fact that the hostess is at home and leaves her cards and departs. Otherwise she would be in the position of an uninvited guest.

It is never polite to send calling cards through the mail in lieu of a personal call unless the sender is absent from the city at the time of a reception, or other entertainment to which she has been invited. Cards should be left or sent by hand at the hour of a function if the invited guest cannot attend.

Pencil Versus Ink.

One Washington woman has written us of her astonishment because a widely known woman has left her cards with the name of her college girl daughter added in ink. It would be better form of course for the college girl to have cards of her own. Many of those versed in the rules of calling card etiquette contend that it is never proper to write on a calling card in ink. Certainly many of us have always believed that it is better form to add items like adressess, messages and telephone numbers in lead pencil to calling cards when it is necessary to do so. But a glance through the card basket of a prominent hostess in Washington reveals the fact that a number of women of distinction do write addresses on their calling cards in ink. It may be more convenient for these women to use ink. It goes to show that the high road of etiquette in our National Capital is traveled by those of an independent turn of mind. But there are shoals ahead for the person without official or special social distinction who deviates from the written rules of etiuette.

Gold Braid Marks Dark-hued Fabrics

Paris (U.P.).—Gold braid that hints at a military origin and festive embroidery in metallic and jewel tones of peasant inspiration gives brilliance and an air of gay luxury to costumes designed in dark-hued rich fabrics at leading Paris fashion houses.

Schiaparelli puts elaborate embroidery in gold and jewel tones on a wine velvet jacket for evening, and introduces braid on the jacket front, sleeves and collar of a daytime suit.

Gold embroidery and metal braid trim the tunic for a dinner gown of purple at that house and embroidered velvet wristlets are of the peasant embroidery type.

Rayon Yarn Useful For Decorations

Rayon yarn has reached an importance in materials for interior decoration, unrealized by many homemakers. An extensive range of fabrics for draperies, curtains, upholstery, bedspreads and wall coverings is being made of this yarn, either alone or in combination with other fibers.

The easy luster control of rayon, its susceptibility to brilliant dyes, improved strength and recent perfections and variation of types, have permitted textile manufacturers to create new decorative fabrics. According to a report of the Textile Economics Bureau, 16,500,000 pounds of rayon yarn were used for this purpose in 1936.

This season, rayon appears in a diversity of style fabrics to suit modern and period decorative schemes—damasks, brocades, satins, basket weaves, velours and printed florals.

First Lady Is Kept Busy With Day of Functions

Mrs. Roosevelt Is Guest of Honor at Luncheon Given by Mrs. Hull, and Entertains at Two Teas Herself.

By Hope Ridings Miller,
The Post Society Editor.

Three social events kept Mrs. Roosevelt's record for ceaseless activity up to standard yesterday. She was the guest of honor at a luncheon given by Mrs. Cordell Hull, wife of the Secretary of State, and she entertained at two teas—one for the Women's Eastern Shore Society the other for a group of friends.

Mrs. Hull's luncheon, taking place in the Carlton room of the hotel, where the Secretary and Mrs. Hull make their home, was the first in a series of similar parties honoring the First Lady. Each Cabinet hostess and the wife of the Speaker of the House have made plans to entertain Mrs. Roosevelt this season, and several already have issued invitations.

HOPE R. MILLER.

Receiving yesterday, the hostess wor a black frock of rough crepe with a wide velvet bow on the shoulder and at the hipline and a small violet-colored hat, tricorne shaped. Pink roses and snapdragons decorated the table.

Among other Cabinet hostesses who have set dates for their luncheons honoring the First Lady are Mrs. Harry H. Woodring, wife of the Secretary of War, who will entertain January 17; Mrs. Claude A. Swanson, wife of the Secretary of the Navy, who has chosen January 20 for her luncheon at the National Democratic Club; Mrs. Henry A. Wallace, wife of the Secretary of Agriculture, who will entertain February 8, and Mrs. Daniel C. Roper, wife of the Secretary of Commerce, February 10.

Mrs. William B. Bankhead, wife of the Speaker of the House of Representatives, will entertain January 18 for Mrs. Roosevelt in the Chinese Room of the Mayflower.

Julie Haydon Goes Dancing

Julie Haydon, actress appearing in "Shadow and Substance" this week, has been showered with invitations since her arrival Monday. But her partying has been restricted to the minimum number of luncheons, teas and cocktail parties. With rehearsals taking up much of her free time, she has turned down invitations right and left. But last night, after the play, she slipped away to the Ball of Nations with a young man she met a few summers ago.

Incidentally, this lovely young lady, who has had several years' experience in films, says she hopes to stay on the legitimate stage for at least five years before she goes back to the movies—if she ever does. A couple of summers ago, when I met her in Hollywood, she had a contract with a major studio, but admitted she preferred the stage. Her career, which boomed considerably in 1935, when she appeared with Noel Coward in "The Scoundrel," for the most part has been built by struggle. As she told me yesterday, she has done everything from clerking in a dime store to being a "stand-in" for Ann Harding in order to get her chance as an actress. Now that she has it, nothing's going to keep her from making good. But dancing at the Ball of Nations was one extra-curricula activity she enjoyed especially during her first professional visit to the Nation's Capital.

Some Whispers And Drumbeats

Countess Potocka, wife of the Polish Ambassador, will not return with the Ambassador, who is due to arrive Tuesday on the Europa. She will remain in her homeland a while longer and may come over in the spring . . . "It's just newspaper talk—not true." That was the comment from the office of the Argentine Ambassador, Dr. Felipe Espil, yesterday regarding the report he is being mentioned as the probable choice for Minister of Foreign Affairs in the Oritz Cabinet . . . Chances are, among the noted men and women scheduled for visits to the Capital this season, will be Luis Quintanilla, one of Spain's foremost artists, who left Barcelona for New York recently with 100 war drawings he will exhibit at the Pierre Mathis Galleries in February. Senor Quintanilla, one of loyalist Spain's war heroes, is a close friend of Dr. Fernando de los Rios, the Spanish Ambassador. No definite plans have been made for Senor Quintanilla's visit to the Capital, but the Ambassador hopes he will come for a few days at least.

The Social Register Locater for 1938, just issued, is being scanned eagerly by many residents here. A volume of more than 1,000 pages, it lists in alphabetical order every name appearing in each of the Social Registers of 14 large cities, including Washington. Heads of prominent families throughout the country are indicated with the city in which the name appears. Looking through it hastily, I noted that nearly all the "60 families" are represented. Speaking of "the 60" reminds me — yesterday the Library of Congress received an order for quick delivery of the much-publicized book to Senator Ashurst's office. A reserve copy—the last in the library—was rushed over.

By Elizabeth Ford.

More flags than one person can wave in an evening filled the ample Mayflower to capacity last night as the Ball of Nations got under way with an energetic program of international dances. Society was all heels and toes as it swung into Mexican "Harabes" and hillbilly square dances. By midnight, the chandeliers were doing a little trucking of their own

Partridge 3d, Mr. and Mrs. Clark Foreman, Mrs. Lucius Wilmerding, Mrs. L. C. Christie, chairman of the board of trustees of American University, drew the name of a country from which a student will be sent to Washington for a year's diet of social sciences under the Hall of Nations plan.

Mrs. Edwards Honored At Capital Luncheon

National President of Daughters of Founders and Patriots of America Is Guest of the District Chapter.

2-30 Sat Clubs— PATRIOTS
By Jessie Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

Mrs. Llewellyn N. Edwards, national president of the Daughters of Founders and Patriots of America, was honored yesterday at a luncheon, at the Parrot Tea Room, given by members of the District chapter, one of the 38 in the United States. The membership comprises a comparatively small group of colonial women with distinguished pedigrees, not only in the colonial service of their ancestors prior to 1687, but with Revolutionary patriotism on the same unbroken paternal line.

Mrs. Gaius M. Rumbaugh is president of the chapter and presided at the luncheon. Mrs. Edwards told of the members of her cabinet, their background and their field of work, and other speakers introduced included Mrs. Thaddeus M. Jones, past national president; Mrs. William Walker, secretary for the coalition of patriotic organizations; Mrs. Howard L. Hodgkins, honorary vice president general of the D. A. R., and Mrs. Henry M. Robert, unopposed candidate for president general of the D. A. R.

Bear Founders' Names.

The guests found their places by little place cards which had been prepared by Mrs. M. E. Woodward, who herself was unable to be present because of illness. The cards, instead of bearing the member's own name, had that of the founder on whose distinguished record she attained membership in the society.

The organization, which was founded in June 1898, prints the lineage of members in volumes and distributes them to hundreds of libraries. It also restores old records which would otherwise disintegrate and be lost. Last year eight volumes of the papers of Charles Carroll of Carrollton were restored for the Maryland Historical Society Library. Members of the organization must trace their ancestry to founders of the colonies between 1607 and 1687 and follow the direct line to a patriot of the Revolution, 1775 to 1782.

The luncheon yesterday was in charge of Mrs. George M. Grimes, chairman of the program committee, assisted by Mrs. Roger Williams, Mrs. Samuel Woodbridge, Miss May Husted and Mrs. Augustine Lonergan. Miss Bessie Porter, of Baltimore, national registrar of the society, was among the guests.

Mayflower Society.

Among others were Mrs. John G. Christopher, of Claremont, N. H., who was a guest of Mrs. Hodgkins, and Miss Inez Wiggin, a member of the Mayflower Society and a guest of Mrs. Otis Crane, who is descended from the Janes family which settled Northhampton, Mass.

Mrs. Edwards' line dates back with direct descent to John Alden and to royalty from Alfred the Great. Maryland families, prominent in history, were presented by Mrs. Hodgkins, of the James Wilson line, also having royal descent; Mrs. Lonergan, wife of the Senior Senator from Connecticut, and her two sisters, Mrs. Gilchrist and Mrs. J. Brent Clarke, of the John Waters line; Mrs. Thomas A. Dobyns, still living at her ancestral Berry estate, with descent from English kings; Mrs. Roger Williams, of the Ijams family, with intermarriages tracing back to royalty, and Mrs. Jones, still owning her ancestral home of the Osborne family on the Eastern Shore, tracing back to many kings, with her other parental line settling in Connecticut, the Edward Culver ancestry.

From Connecticut there was the Grant family, represented in the organization by Mme. Cantacuzene; Mrs. Acheson F. Haason, carrying the Huntington ancestry; Mrs. George Madden Grimes, the Bennett family; Mrs. George W. McIver, the Raymonds; Miss Husted and her sister, Mrs. William H. Walker, the Husteds; Mrs. Jessie Porter Wood, the Porters, with the Connecticut Gov. Wolcott; Mrs. Bertha M. Robertson, the Munsons, and Mrs. E. Helen Temple, the Simsbury Cases.

Rhode Island Lines.

Among the Rhode Island lines, represented as indicated by the little place cards, were the Shreves, Mrs. Thomas W. Petty's family, and the Sheldons, ancestors of Mrs. Inex Sheldon Tyler. Delaware was represented by Miss Kate M. Jaquette, descended from the first Governor and tracing back to royal lines; New York by Mrs. Gary F. Walters, descended from the Tappans, of Fort George and Kingston; Mrs. Redwood Vandergrift, of the Van Noorstrant family; Mrs. Quincy A. Gates, of the Jayne ancestry, first of Long Island and later of Pennsylvania with descent from the signers of the Magna Charta.

Mrs. Augustine Kempton represented the Wharton family of Pennsylvania and also is of Magna Charta descent. From prominent Massachusetts lines were Mrs. Samuel B. Woodbridge, of the famous Adams line; Mrs. Brumbaugh, whose ancestor, Nicholas Brown, was a founder of Lynn, Mass., prior to 1628; Mrs. David H. Moore, whose ancestor, Anthony Morse, was treasurer of the colony in 1625; Mrs. Frank O. Bowman, of the prominent Boston Curt family; Mrs. Edson L. Whitney, a portrait of whose ancestor, Thomas Carter, hangs in the Public Library at Woburn, Mass.; Miss Lillian Norton, of the Nicholas Norton line, and Mrs. William Goff Sears and her daughter, Mrs. John K. Freiot, both of earliest Massachusetts history, the John Biglo and Mary Warin marriage being the first recorded in Watertown and Mrs. Freiot's paternal ancestor's name, Richard Sears, being found on the tax list of Plymouth Colony in 1633.

Abattoir Permit Is Now Invalid, D.C. Heads Told

Seal Reports Gobel Grant Voided by 'Six Months' Clause in It.

Corporation Counsel Elwood H. Seal yesterday advised the District Commissioners that they have the authority to cancel a "repair permit" issued to Adolf Gobel, Inc., on April 27, 1937.

A stipulation in the permit required that "work must be begun within six months of date or permit automatically becomes void and cannot be renewed."

Work contemplated under the Gobel abattoir permit was commenced, but has not been further prosecuted since September 7, 1937, Seal stated.

Under an existent clause in the District Building Code, Seal found that "permits shall be valid and in force for a period not exceeding six months, except that buildings started within this time and continuously under construction for more than six months may proceed to completion within a reasonable time under authority of the original permit."

Building Inspector John W. Oehmann inspected the plant May 3, 1937 and reported "work not started." Again, July 27, he reported "work not started." However, on August 16, his report stated there had been work on "clearing footings and placing forms."

During August there was more work, and on September 7, he reported "column forms in place." Thereafter, however, until the last day of inspection, December 14, he reported "no further progress."

Based on this report Seal held that the work had not been "continuously under construction for more than six months" and consequently that the permit has expired.

The annual meeting, election and banquet of the District of Columbia Commandery, Military Order of Foreign Wars, will take place at the Army and Navy Club on next Wednesday night. Maj. James Alexander Lyon, the commander, will preside. There will be a number of distinguished military and naval guests.

The special committee for the occasion is headed by Maj. Russell P. Freeman and includes Commander George H. Tribble, Col. Joseph M. Heller, Maj. Paul J. McGahan, Lieut. Col. A. H. Dondero, and Maj. Edwin S. Bettelheim, jr.

Maj. Lyon, distinguished Washington physician and surgeon, has just received a citation from the national headquarters of the order, signed by the commander in chief, Chief Justice Pelham St. George Bissell, of the New York City Courts.

The Washington Commandery is one of the oldest in the order, which is a hereditary patriotic society founded by officers of the United States Army, Navy and Marine Corps of the Spanish-American War.

The election of the delegation to represent the District of Columbia Commandery at the triennial convention to be held in Philadelphia early this year will also take place Wednesday night.

Officers of the Washington Retreat League are busy formulating plans for a city-wide rally at the Mayflower next Tuesday. Mrs. Lynch Younger is chairman of the rally; and vice president of the league; Mrs. Margaret E. Diggins, secretary, and Mrs. Harry J. Kirk, president of the Washington Retreat League.

The Trinity College musical clubs including orchestra and Glee Clubs will give the following musical program, "Adoration," by Borowski; "Priests March from Athalia," by Mendelssohn; "Emitte Spiritum," by Schuetky-Singenberger; "In a Spanish Garden," by Moskowski-Mildenberg; "Those Songs My Mother Used to Sing," by Smith; "Our Trinity, Alma Mater Song," and "Hungarian Dance," by Brahms.

Mrs. Younger's committees are: hospitality, Mrs. Leo J. Kelly; program, Mrs. Harry J. Kirk; ushers, Miss Agnes Marceron; publicity, Mrs. Harry E. Goodwin. The program starts promptly at 8:15 p. m.

His Excellency, the Most Reverend Michael J. Curley, Archbishop of Baltimore, will be the principal speaker. Others on the program will be the Rev. Felix M. Kirsh, O. M. Cap.; the Rev. John S. Spence, spiritual director of the Washington Retreat League, and Mrs. Harry J. Kirk, the president.

Chamberlain Balks Van Zeeland Plan

London, Jan. 7 (AP).—The question whether political or economic agreements should come first in efforts to stimulate world trade was reported to have dominated a conference today between Paul Van Zeeland, of Belgium, and Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain of Britain.

Van Zeeland, former Belgian premier, commissioned by France and Britain to survey world-wide trade possibilities, spent four hours with Chamberlain at 10 Downing street.

Van Zeeland was understood to favor economic aid for needy nations, without any political guarantees in return, a view contrary to that of the British prime minister.

Charges Heaped Upon Captured Desperadoes

William Payne and John Washington Turner, North Carolina desperadoes captured last Monday, have confessed to robbing several banks, burglarizing a steam laundry at Florence, S. C.; committing a holdup and several safe burglaries and stealing between 20 and 25 automobiles, J. Edgar Hoover, director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, announced yesterday.

Pending outcome of trial of the pair at Asheville, N. C., on State murder charges, Federal charges against them will be held in abeyance, Hoover said.

Hunger Menaces D. C. Children After Collapse of Velvet Ball

"The school children will be fed," she said. "We are going ahead. We will concentrate now on our plans for a magazine, from which we will get all the subscription money."

Referring to the Velvet Ball and its expensive overhead, Mrs. Boyle said:

"The ball cannot be called a failure. We got in a jam on it and there was some talk of abandoning the whole project. We did not see how we could run out from under our responsibility and do that.

"We certainly brok even on the ball, if we include the ads which we received from New York."

Professional Was Hired.

The "jam" to which Mrs. Boyle referred concerned the circumstances which arose following the hiring of Jay F. Corbett, of New York, as promoter of the ball.

A professional, Corbett conceived the idea of the ball several months ago. He first approached the Chinese Embassy, offering to donate part of the receipts to the cause of China in its undeclared war with Japan. The project fell through because the velvet industry dislikes to antagonize Japanese silk exporters.

Next he went to the Woman's Press Club. He was told that organization could not participate.

Finally the plan was presented to Mrs. Boyle, pioneer in the fight to provide Washington school children with hot lunches. Mrs. Boyle agreed to lend the name of her organization—the Citizens Permanent Committee, Inc.—to the ball.

Big Preparations Made.

Elaborate preparations were made. The Velvet Guild, a New York trade organization, agreed to lend jewelry valued at $500,000 and gorgeous velvet gowns which would be displayed by the cream of Washington society. The guild also arranged to provide a number of well-paid advertisements for the official program.

Meantime, an imposing list of patronesses was compiled for the affair, scheduled as one of the most brilliant of the post-holiday period.

Promoter Corbett began soliciting Washington merchants for advertisements for the official program. One of them asked the Better Business Bureau to investigate. As a result, the Citizens Permanent Committee called upon Corbett to resign as promoter.

Corbett agreed, but there was the matter of a contract to be disposed of.

Approved by Hitt.

Mrs. Boyle said last night that she had signed the contract with Corbett after it had been approved by former Judge Isaac R. Hitt, a member of her board.

"We were to get $2 from every ticket," Mrs. Boyle said, "and also all proceeds from the sale of the program."

The contract set $6 as the minimum at which tickets should be sold. Corbett agreed to pay all costs of the ball, and in return was to receive the income from advertising in the program and all revenue from tickets above the fixed guaranty of $2 a ticket for the committee. Between 600 and 700 tickets were sold.

A second contract gave Corbett similar direction of the Velvet (fashion) Show, held yesterday. Minimum sale price for tickets to the show was fixed at 50 cents. Corbett guaranteed that the committee would receive 25 cents on each ticket.

Bought Contract for $1,550.

On December 11 the school lunch committee bought in Corbett's contracts for $1,550, after stipulating that he pay certain debts. The payment of these debts, it is understood, left him about $900 in cash.

Among Corbett's duties had been the training of the style show connected with the ball. When he retired, this work was taken over by Miss Helen Virginia Meyer, fashion historian of New York. She had been engaged previously to supply the gowns at a cost of $300. Under the new arrangement, she got an additional $500 for staging the show and for promotional work in New York. She also received a sum for traveling expenses on two trips from New York to Washington.

Expenses Are Listed.

A preliminary estimate of expenses was made on December 15, four days after Corbett's departure. It follows:

*Hotel	$2,000
Helen Virginia Meyer	860
Paid to Corbett	1,550
Printing of program	550
Telegrams	300
Other printing	180
Orchestra	180
Addressing envelopes	25
Salaries for office help	505
Linen service	75
Total	$6,225

(*This included the price of dinners at $1.50 a plate, based on an expected attendance of 1,000 persons and cost of the ballroom.)

The printing bill was boosted by a mistake made in giving Mrs. William B. Bankhead, wife of the Speaker of the House, her wrong ranking in the list of patronesses sent out with invitations. Her name was printed far down on the list. It should have been just below the name of Lady Lindsay, wife of the British Ambassador.

After the mistake was discovered—not by Mrs. Bankhead, who apparently was unaware of it—new invitations were printed and sent out.

Mrs. Roosevelt was honorary chairman of the ball. Mrs. Evalyn Walsh McLean was honorary vice chairman. Mrs. Boyle was listed as "ex-chairman," and Mrs. Lawrenee Wood Robert, jr., as chairman.

Tableau a Feature.

"Chip" Robert, husband of the latter and former Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, was one of the ticket takers at the ball.

A feature of the ball was a tableau, director by Miss Meyer, in which Washington women represented queens of England and First Ladies of the White House over a period of nine centuries. Thus, Mrs. Turner Battle appeared as a reincarnation of Matilda of Flanders, spouse of William the Conqueror (1066-1087). Emily Lewis Custis Stevens appeared in a dress modeled after one worn by Martha Washington. No double was needed for Mrs. Franklin D. Rosevelt, since she appeared in person at the Mayflower, smiling and willing to display her black velvet gown.

Joseph Marshall, manager of the Better Business Bureau, said the bureau's position on all charity affairs was that "they should have their overhead expenses so definitely planned at their inception that a sizable percentage would be guaranteed to the charity for which they were intended."

Praises Mrs. Boyle's Efforts.

Mrs. Mary Steele, director of women's and professional projects of the local WPA, called The Post last night to praise Mrs. Boyle's efforts.

"We are not concerned with the success or failure of any one project designed to raise money for the school lunch," she said. "We are much concerned over the project as a whole.

"The fact remains that 5,200 school children are getting hot lunches today because of the efforts of Mrs. Boyle and her committee. We are extremely well pleased with the results obtained and believe Mrs. Boyle is doing a magnificent job."

Enough food has been purchased to last through January, Mrs. Boyle said. However, on January 1 not enough money was in the treasury to make purchases for the ensuing month. M. C. Hargrove, District purchasing agent, who has been buying the lunch supplies on a competitive bidding basis, turned over to Mrs. Boyle a list of firms with whom his office had been doing business.

Saved $1,000, She Says.

Since then Mrs. Boyle has been doing the buying, and she says she has saved $1,000 in the purchase of two weeks' supplies.

A total of $15,300 has come into the office of Auditor Daniel J. Donovan for the lunch fund. Of this sum, about $1,900 remains.

A benefit boxing show at Griffith Stadium brought in about $13,000, and a football game $3,000. No figures have been released on a charity ball at the Mayflower October 26, but Mrs. Boyle said they were "sadly disappointing."

She said the magic shows given at the Belasco had placed the committee in a hole. She explained that she had agreed to pay $500 for the theater, not knowing that she also would have to pay for the stage hands and an orchestra. The unions, Mrs. Boyle said, are raising money to help her out.

Puts Hopes in Magazine.

Mrs. Boyle now is placing considerable hope on a magazine the committee is preparing to publish. Subscriptions are being sold on a health bond basis. A health bond sells for $1.25 and entitles the purchaser to a year's subscription. Twenty-five cents of this is earmarked to cover mailing costs, and the $1 goes into the school lunch fund.

To date, between 500 and 700 bonds have been sold. Mrs. Boyle hopes to sell 12,000. Kelvin T. Orrison, of the Federal Lithograph Co., will be business manager. Mrs. Boyle will be editor and will select other members of the editorial staff.

Army Engineers Urge $275,290,319 Fund for Rivers

During the next fiscal year, the Army Engineers reported yesterday, $275,290,319 could be expended profitably on rivers and harbors and flood control projects throughout the United States.

Col. Edward M. Markham, former chief of Army Engineers, who made the annual report, tentatively recommended an outlay for waterway improvements of $100,753,124, and $127,844,610 for flood control work in the year beginning July 1.

An additional $46,692,585 would be required, he estimated, to maintain existing waterways projects.

(President Roosevelt already has whittled down the program, in the interests of economy. In his budget message Wednesday he recommended that the major flood control appropriations be held to $76,000,000 and new rivers and harbors outlays limited to $30,000,000, plus $37,500,000 for maintenance.)

The engineers' flood control recommendations, the largest on record, overshadowed for the first time those for rivers and harbors.

Pair Pleads Guilty To Passport Fake

Pleading guilty to an indictment charging them with presenting a false affidavit to the State Department to obtain a passport, Hope St. Clair, night club dancer, and Harry Weiner, a musician, yesterday were placed on probation by Justice Joseph W. Cox in District Court.

According to State Department officials, Miss St. Clair applied for a passport to the Far East last summer. Weiner then stated she was his sister, Hannah Weiner. A birth certificate was shown by him at the time, it was stated.

The American consul at Shanghai discovered an error in the passport and radioed the State Department here that a young Polish woman was traveling under an American passport. An investigation disclosed, it was asserted, that the passport had been obtained to permit Miss St. Clair to travel to the Far East with a theatrical troupe. She was arrested in New York City and Weiner was seized in Hawaii, where he was engaged in musical enterprises.

British Trade Treaty Is Sped By Hull Notice

Trade

Argentina Next.

Shortly after that announcement the State Department is expected to issue notice that negotiation of a trade agreement with Argentina is contemplated, the initial announcement which sets negotiation of such undertakings in motion. Meanwhile, negotiations for a trade pact with Czechoslovakia are well advanced with the prospects bright for an agreement in the near future.

Thus Secretary Hull is pushing his reciprocal trade program on half-a-dozen fronts as a means of stimulating world trade for the twofold purpose of increasing this country's foreign trade and thus aiding in its economic recovery and of world-wide economic appeasement as a step toward maintenance of peace.

The prospective agreement with Great Britain is regarded as especially significant, not only because it will affect the largest volume of trade between any two countries in the world, but because it will tie the United States and Great Britain—the two foremost democracies—together in an economic, reciprocal pact at a time of general world tension and distress.

Must Deal Separately.

The Anglo-American negotiations will not affect the trade between the United States and the British Dominions. Each of the latter, as Canada is doing, must negotiate separately with this Government. Nevertheless the negotiations will reach around the world, since the trade with the British Colonial Empire is comprised within its sweep.

The British Colonial Empire comprises Kenya, Oganda, Tanganyika, Nyasaland, Northern Rhodesia, Zanzibar in East Africa; Nigeria, Gold Coast, Sierra Leone, Gambia and St. Helena and Ascension in West Africa; Gibraltar, Malta, Cyprus and the mandated territories of Palestine and Transjordan in the Mediterranean area; Ceylon, Straits Settlements, Federated Malay States, Brunei, Sarwak, Hongkong, Mauritius, Seychelles, Aden and the States of Johore, Kedah, Kelantan, Perlis, Trengganu and North Borneo in the Middle and Far East; Fiji, Gilbert and Ellice Islands Colony, British Solomon Island Protectorate and Tonga in the Pacific; the Bahamas, Barbados, Bermuda, British Guiana, British Honduras, Jamaica, the Leeward Islands, Trinidad and Tobago, the Windward Islands and the Falkland Islands and dependencies in the Atlantic and West Indies.

Explains the List.

Explaining the list of articles on which this Government will consider granting concessions to the United Kingdom, Newfoundland and the British Colonial Empire, Secretary Hull said:

"The attached list is not a list of articles on which concessions are proposed, but rather a list of articles which will come under consideration for the possible granting of concessions. Their publication enables interested persons to learn whether or not products in which they are interested may be considered for the granting of concessions to the Government of the United Kingdom.

"Concessions will not be granted on any article not covered by the present or supplementary listing, and decision to grant a concession on any article covered in the listing will not be made until after the dates set by the Committee for Reciprocity Information for the presentation of briefs and for supplementary oral hearings.

"Some of the products listed may not be the subject of any concession under the terms of the agreement, and the import duties on those items which are included in the agreement as finally negotiated may or may not be changed."

The list included various types of chemicals, ranging from carbon dioxide to cellulose acetate and compounds; inks, halibut and sperm oils; wool grease; linseed and flaxseed oils; bath salts and soaps; paints; varnishes; clay and quarry tiles; earthenware and crockery; various types of parts of electrical machinery; bottles and jars; table and kitchen ware and utensils; iron in pigs; manganese ore; tungsten metal and acid; steel ingots; sheets or plates of iron or steel; wire; textiles; saddlery and harness hardware; agricultural implements; automobiles and parts; bicycles; various types of machinery; cigarettes; manufactured and unmanufactured tobacco; various types of fish; meat pastes; biscuits; preserved berries; limes; pineapples, jellies, jams and fruit butters; grass seeds; all types of whisky, rum, gin, ale, porter stout and beer; ginger ale; cotton goods, flax; various woven fabrics; linoleum; blankets; wearing apparel; sporting goods; gloves, hats and caps and a long list of other articles.

Indeed, the whole range of British trade is fairly well included. The articles on which the British are considering granting this country concessions will be made public by that government in London.

House Will Honor Clerk M. C. Shield

Marcellus C. Shield, who has just completed his thirtieth year as clerk and assistant clerk of the House Appropriations Committee, will be honored today at a luncheon in the House restaurant. Members of the House and other clerks will attend.

Shield was appointed assistant clerk of the committee by Representative James A. Tawney, of Minnesota, the then chairman, to succeed Kennedy F. Rea, now clerk of the Senate Committee on Appropriations.

He was appointed clerk by Representative John J. Fitzgerald, of New York, chairman, to succeed James C. Courts, who had served the committee 39 years.

Panay Was Bombed by Design, Asserts Ex-Aide to Gen. Chiang

Col. Tchou Says China Can Go on Indefinitely Under Pressure.

COL. M. THOMAS TCHOU.

The Panay—"Yes; they first made certain it was the Panay; it was sent down by design; there was a sinister purpose . . . for, you see, there are things on board such vessels . . . it was with sinister design," said Col. M. Thomas Tchou, one-time aide to Gen. Chiang Kai-shek and a master of Confucian philosophy at the age of 12, now here free of official title so that he can talk "freely" and also smile.

"And I smile to you because I feel like smiling," said the colonel from a Powhatan Hotel lobby chair shortly after arriving yesterday.

He explained his impulse to smile.

"We can go on indefinitely under the present pressure, and the pressure is lifting now. You know, when you place a ton on an inch, the pressure is quite great . . . but when the area is extended the pressure is lessened.

"Tiring Them Out."

"We are fighting the war according to our own ideas, and we are satisfied."

His face lifted knowingly.

"Yes,' he said, "we are drawing them inland; that is very obvious; and also we are tiring them out. We know the Japanese very well."

"The Japanese mind holds to ancient, medieval feel—the urged for conquest. And American is not excepted from the scheme," he said.

"And what do we ask of America? Ah," he said in the English he learned in Chinese and Belgian schools, "America is our very dear friend . . . What is the English saying: A friend in need is a friend indeed. You could help us; maybe some time we could help you. As a friend you can decide.

"Just now, there are not so many Americans fighting with us. Understand, we don't need manpower; that we have in abundance. What we need is equipment to fight with. We have everything else and we die with joy."

Atrocities Minimized.

Col. Tchou emphasized that he wasn't a propagandist, but said the stories of "Japanese atrocities" were minimized in the American press. He said the "outrages against women and other civilians" were "shocking and abominable beyond expression." And immediately his face was shadowed, introspective:

"We have no animosity against the Japanese people, as such; we have no dislike for them; we feel only against their militarists who are exploiting the Japanese people . . . Gentlemen, you must know that the Japanese people are suffering, too; it is no picnic to go out and kill other people. If I were in the position of the Japanese people I would be suffering indescribably in my heart. We are a peace-loving people . . . We love peace more than you will ever know."

Calls U. S. Press Fair.

Otherwise, Col. Tchou said that "the least we hope of Russia is that they will not assist the aggressor . . . That the American press is following a fair course; some things I read would give the impression we are giving up, which, of course, isn't true" . . . "I am proud of the way our armies have conducted the war. Have you ever read of any of our airplanes committing atrocities?" . . . The Panay survivors could best tell what occurred, and "what is the Japanese's ultimate aim? That question might best be put to the Japanese!" . . .

Of the reported Italian, German, Japanese tie-up, he said:

"These countries make very strange bedfellows—and they have very different, yes, very different dreams."

The Colonel has 53 engagements in this country during the next three months. He appears today at the National Press Club, under auspices of the Washington Committee for Aid to China. His subject will be "The Crisis in China." The Rev. Russell J. Clinchy, pastor of Mount Pleasant Congregational Church, will speak. Mrs. Eugene Meyer will be chairman. Guests of honor will include Dr. Chengting T. Wang, the Chinese Ambassador, and Dr. Roberta Ma, American-educated Chinese woman who taught at the University of Canton. The luncheon will be at 1:30 p. m.

Old M St. Market Sale Is Sought by Commissioners

The District Commissioners will ask Congress for permission to sell the old M street market in Georgetown, abandoned more than 15 years ago, it was announced yesterday.

In a bill prepared by Corporation Counsel Elwood H. Seal, the Commisisoners want authorization to sell the market as it no longer is required for public purposes.

The site was purchased in 1802 for market purposes, and the title was taken in the "Mayor, Recorder, Alderman and Common Council of George Town." Subsequently, by an act of Congress, this title became vested in the municipal corporation, the District of Columbia.

The market was in operation for more than 100 years. In the past few years, it has been partially rented, but the Commissioners said the amount collected did not warrant retention of the property.

Harlan MILLER — Over the Coffee

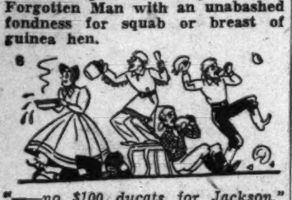
Tonight's the night of the elite $100-a-plate Jackson Day dinner, and how it must remind the shade of Old Hickory of the frenzied scramble for fried chicken by the proletarian mob at his first inaugural party! But Jackson dished it up free.

* * * *

White House servants were bowled over and trampled in the rush for refreshments. . . . Dishes and glassware were crunched underfoot. . . . Frontiersmen seized whole chickens and gnawed at them. . . . Ladies made off with tureensful of succotash. . . . There'll be none of that tonight.

* * * *

In memory of that Jackson dinner of 100 years ago, some prosperous Democrat ought to buy a free $100 ticket and present it tonight to some Forgotten Man with an unabashed fondness for squab or breast of guinea hen.



"—no $100 ducats for Jackson."

Between President Roosevelt and his spiritual ancestor, the General, there are some amusing resemblances and differences, mostly reassuring to nervous Whigs who fear the Republic which survived Jackson can't assimilate another two years (or six) of Mr. Roosevelt.

* * * *

Jackson was born only two years after his parents came over from Ireland . . . Mr. Roosevelt's forebears have been absorbing Americanism lo these 300 years.

* * * *

Both of them were lawyers, landowners, capitalists. . . . The barons of the 1830's disdained Jackson as an uncouth backwoodsman; their grandsons are even more chagrinned with President Roosevelt is a "traitor to his class."

* * * *

Once Jackson was fined $1,000 for contempt of court . . . But the Supreme Court let President Roosevelt off with just a dignified off-the-record scolding.

* * * *

Tories with daughters in Reno like to roll their eyes at a couple of divorces among the Presidential children. . . . But it was one divorce too few—or too late—that plagued Jackson.

* * * *

Just as Landon hastened recently to Roosevelt's support, so did Adams, whom Jackson had defeated, hasten to Old Hickory's support, in an international crisis.

* * * *

Precisely as Roosevelt has his brain trust (or does he still have it?) so did Jackson have his Kitchen Cabinet, with primitive Rex Tugwells and Tommy the Corks and Charlie Michelsons.

* * * *

Before moving into the White House, Jackson was beaten for the Presidency, Roosevelt for the Vice Presidency . . . Both were gifted for barbed phrases, but Jackson's got him into several duels.

* * * *

"—free seat for the Forgotten Man"

Like Roosevelt, President Jackson was accused of encroaching on the Constitution, though he lived in the horse and buggy era; but the danged old document survived and even had a lot of little amendments.

* * * *

Looking at the White House with the deep melancholy of a Vandenberg or a Carter Glass, in a Jacksonian crisis, (1837) Senator Calhoun once prophesied tragically:

"The day is gone, the night approaches!"

What night?

* * * *

Jackson balanced the budget; the country didn't owe a dime. . . . Yet he brought on the panic of 1837, or was it a recession. . . . His boys on the Hill occasionally took a snifter in the cloak room. . . .

* * * *

CIO Unions to Confer On Local Recession

A conference on the business recession and its effects on Washington will be held by all Committee for Industrial Organization unions here at headquarters of the United Federal Workers, 532 Seventeenth street northwest, at 2:30 p. m. today.

Lewis, chairman of the C. I. O., urging all unions to attack the problem of unemployment in their own locality.

D. C. Heads Seek Zoning Appeal Body

Seal Drafts Measure to Set Up Board of Five Members.

Creation of a Board of Zoning Adjustment, composed of five members, to grant variances from the strict regulations of the zoning regulations, will be recommended by the District Commissioners in a bill prepared by Corporation Counsel Elwood H. Seal, it was disclosed yesterday.

It was explained that the lack of such a board has in the past materially hampered the proper administration of zoning regulations.

Would End Hardships.

The board would be composed of one member designated by the National Park and Planning Commission, one by the Zoning Commission, and three residents of the District appointed by the Commissioners.

Hardships worked upon an owner of property, "because of the exceptional narrowness, shallowness, shape or topographical condition of his property," would be ironed out by the adjustment board, it was stated.

The recommendation also included an item which will give authorization by law of a Zoning Advisory Council, composed of a member designated by the National Park and Planning Commission, one member by the Zoning Commission and a representative appointed by the District Commissioners.

Appeal Fee Sought.

Appeals to the adjustment board may be taken by any person aggrieved by the Zoning Commission, or by any department affected, by any decision of the inspector of buildings, granting or refusing a building permit or granting or withholding a certificate of occupancy, it was stated.

It was further recommended that the Commissioners of the District may require and fix a fee to be charged for an appeal, which fee shall be paid, as directed by the Commissioners, with the filing of the appeal.

The original zoning act for the District was approved March 1, 1920, at which time zoning was practically unknown. It was pointed out that the District was a pioneer in the field, and that the framers of this act had few precedents to guide them.

Would End Confusion.

The District Commissioners will also recommend that neither the chief clerk nor the chief inspector of the Health Department shall act as a deputy to the health officer of the District.

Under the District appropriations act of the fiscal year ended June 30, 1893, a provision stated "that the chief clerk shall hereafter act as a deputy to the health officer." And again in the appropriations act of the fiscal year 1910, the chief inspector of the Health Department was designated as deputy health officer.

It is to avoid the confusion resulting from erroneous designations of these officers that the Commissioners have recommended the passage of this bill, it was stated.

Lorton Trades 13 For D. C. Gaming Czar, 12 Others

Sam Beard, District gambling czar, returned yesterday to within 20 miles of the city whose underworld he once was reputed to control. He has served 21 months of a 2 to 6 year prison term for violation of gaming laws.

Beard was one of 13 short-term convicts transferred from the Federal Penitentiary in Atlanta, Ga., to the District Reformatory at Lorton, Va., where the men will finish their sentences.

Guarded by United States marshals, the prisoners, all Washington men, were brought by bus from Atlanta to Lorton in exchange for 13 inmates of the local penal institution who, according to Ray L. Huff, general superintendent, presented "custodial difficulties" in a prison without walls.

At the time of Beard's conviction, it was recalled yesterday, District officials felt the gambling king would be "safer" in Atlanta than in Lorton, from which, they feared, he might continue to wield power over the Washington underworld.

Dismissing any such possibility, Huff said last night, "We have things pretty well under control down here at Lorton."

Waring E. Evans Resigns His Post

Waring E. Evans, 79, secretary-treasurer of Judd & Detweiler, Inc., has retired after 55 years of continuous service with the firm, it was learned yesterday.

First employed by the company as bookkeeper and record clerk, he held that position until 1905, when he became secretary-treasurer. He will remain associated with the concern as a director and trustee, firm officials announced.

Jungle Victor, Crash Victim, Inspires Poem

Like the professional daredevil who remained "intact" until his leg was broken when he slipped on a bathmat, Malcolm Davis, bird expert at the Zoo, has qualified so perfectly that the retired principal of Roosevelt High School has written a poem about him.

The retired principal figures in the story because he happens to be Allan Davis, father of Malcolm. They are next-door neighbors at 900 and 904 Eleventh street southeast, respectively.

The younger Davis was a member of the National Geographic Society-Smithsonian Institution expedition, which collected more than 1,000 tigers, reptiles, giraffes, wild buffalo, etc., in the Dutch East Indies last year.

With Dr. William M. Mann, Zoo director; Mrs. Mann and other members of the party, Davis was in almost constant danger from fever, tropical heat, animal and insect bites and other perils of the mission. On the homeward journey, he worked for days on end in the ship's hold, where the temperature exceeded 110 degrees.

But he stayed healthy until last Sunday, when his automobile figured in an accident near Largo, Md. Both Davis and his wife were bruised and their car was demolished.

And so—the poem Author Allan Davis, dedicated to his son Malcolm:

The Tiger was his playmate,
The Python was his prey,
In the jungles of Sumatra
Where he passed the summer day.

But on the hills of Maryland
Where untamed taxis drive,
His car is wrecked, and only chance

Engineer Units Weigh City Cost Of $45,000,000

Council Gets Committee Recommendations for D. C. Budget.

A 1939 District budget held to $45,000,000, exclusive of any public works grants or loans financed by the Federal Government, and an increase in the Federal diversion to at least $7,500,000 were recommended in a report to the District of Columbia Council of Engineering and Architectural Societies last night by its committee on the budget.

The committee also recommended that diversion of gasoline tax revenue to street lighting be opposed and that installment payment of real estate taxes be used. The report was referred to the member bodies for study and action.

Two new committees were appointed, one to study the problem of radio interference, the other to co-operate with the District Commissioners on matters relating to long-time planning for Washington.

Final draft of a bill soon to be introduced in Congress to require licensing of engineers practicing here was approved. The bill, already approved by 10 of 12 local chapters of various national societies, provides that all persons seeking to practice here must satisfy a five-man licensing board that they have the necessary education and experience.

The board could require an applicant to pass an examination to establish his qualifications. Also, after due hearing, it could revoke his license if he were found guilty of malpractice.

All 1937 officers were re-elected unanimously. These included A. B. McDaniel, consulting engineer, chairman; R. W. Prince, C. & P. Telephone Co., vice chairman, and James Fulton Fox, Navy Department, secretary-treasurer.

Dietz Asks Release On Wire-Tap Ruling

Citing a recent United States Supreme Court decision that the Government was not entitled to use wire-tapping evidence in criminal trials if the wire-tapping involved interstate conversations, attorneys for Abe Plisco, alias William Dietz, yesterday sought to have Justice Joseph W. Cox, in District Court, dismiss an indictment charging Dietz and 30 others with conspiracy to violate the District's gaming laws.

Roger Robb and John W. Fihelly, assistant United States attorneys, argued that the case did not involve interstate tapping, although it was admitted intrastate tapping had been indulged in and formed a major part of the prosecution's case against the defendants.

A host of attorneys represented Dietz and his cohorts, most of whom were arested when his Albee Building offices, wherein he conducted the National Telecast Service, were raided. Police then said the Telecast was sending up to the minute race track information to scores of places in the District where gaming allegedly was in progress.

Justice Cox took the case under advisement.

Big Anacostia Span to Have Six Car Lanes

Contracts for $2,000,000 Bridge to Be Let Early in 1939.

Plans for the new $2,000,000 highway bridge over the Anacostia River on the line of Pennsylvania southeast will provide for six lanes of traffic, Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, highway director, announced yesterday.

Simultaneous with announcement of construction details of the Anacostia span, it was disclosed yesterday that plans for construction of a grade separation bridge at K street and Rock Creek and Potomac Parkway have been shelved by the Budget Bureau. District officials, however, thought the amount would be inserted by Congress.

The Budget Bureau's action was the result of its proposal to use $765,000 of the special highway funds for street lighting, it was revealed.

The Anacostia project calls for $650,000 from the District budget for 1939, now before the House subcommittee on appropriations.

Spread Over Years.

Pointing out that cost of the Pennsylvania avenue bridge will be spread over three fiscal years, Capt. Whitehurst placed the total cost of construction at $2,000,000.

An amount of $25,000 was appropriated for the fiscal year 1937 for plans and preliminary investigation. A New York firm is drawing the plans for the construction, Whitehurst stated.

"We have the temporary plans already and they have been approved by the Park and Planning Commission, the Fine Arts Commission, the Board of Trade and the Traffic Advisory Counsel," Whitehurst announced.

At no time during the construction of the bridge will the flow over the old bridge be interrupted, Whitehurst said.

"Because of a kink in Pennsylvania avenue at the point where construction will begin, a little downstream, when the new bridge is half completed it will enable traffic to run half way over the new bridge and continue over the old bridge," Whitehurst sand.

Fixed Span of 144 Feet.

The bridge will have a fixed channel span 144 feet wide with a minimum vertical clearance of 30.6 feet above mean low water, which provides for a width of 40 feet at right angles to the axis of the channel and a clearance of 33 feet above mean low water.

At a hearing held yesterday, at the Munitions Building, no objections were raised to application by the Engineer Commissioner of the District for a permit authorizing construction of the bridge.

Contracts for construction probably will be let about the beginning of 1939. The job should not take more than 20 months, Whitehurst said.

Besides the K street bridge, it was learned that several minor street improvements were eliminated by the Budget Bureau from estimates of the District Commissioners because of the proposal which would transfer street lighting costs from the general revenues to the special gasoline tax and motor vehicle funds.

The Congressional appropriation committees are expected to investigate the K street grade separation bridge in connection with the proposal to divert the highway taxes. District officials, if asked, will probably oppose diversion of the funds.

It was ponted out that a serious traffic congestion exists at the intersection since the opening of the Rock Creek and Potomac Parkway. The two-lane bridge which now carries traffic over Rock Creek is entirely inadequate, officials stated.

It was estimated the cost for improvements, which would include the replacement of the old bridge and construction of the grade separation structure, would be $320,000.

The project was planned eventually to become part of the proposed highway over K street which would connect with Key Bridge, as a by-pass for Georgetown. This latter project has been postponed for many years, however.

The proposed bridge would have four lanes plus two ramps which would be directed to the surface drives of Rock Creek Park.

Auto Crashes Cause Injury to Six in D. C. Area

Pair Hurt as They Jump in Front of Tram to Escape Car.

Six persons were seriously injured in traffic accidents in and near the District yesterday.

Sarah Calloway, 27, 1806 New Hampshire avenue northwest, and Hilliard Jones, 27, 1743 S street northwest, are in Gallinger Hospital with head injuries. At Fourteenth and Corcoran streets northwest, police said, they jumped in front of a street car to avoid being hit by an auto.

Lloyd B. Sydnor, 32, 346 Raleigh street southeast, was treated at Casualty Hospital for serious head injuries after an accident at East Capitol and Ninth streets. Police said Sydnor was a passenger in a car operated by Earl J. Thomas, 32, of Anacostia, which collided with a car operated by Hyman Otlin, 34, 1515 Isherwood street northeast.

At New Jersey avenue and L street southeast, Benjamin Brown, colored, 1410 one-half street southwest, suffered serious head injuries and was admitted to Gallinger Hospital. He was in a car that collided with a truck operated by Gustaf Hermanson, 25, of 3107 W street southeast. Police said Hermanson is held on a charge of reckless driving.

Clouds of Gas Flame on Sun In Films Here

"Closeups" of sunrise and sunset on the moon and thrilling movies of "fireworks" on the sun, shooting up as high as 600,000 miles, were some wonders of the solar system shown last night before the National Geographic Society by Dr. Robert R. McMath, director of the McMath-Hulbert Observatory, in Detroit, in an illustrated lecture at Constitution Hall.

Most spectacular and awe inspiring were his motion pictures of great clouds of super-heated gas, known as "prominences," which seethe and erupt from the gaseous outer layer of the sun. Large enough to engulf the earth and several other planets of equal size, these gas clouds are constantly in motion, appearing, disappearing and assuming all sorts of fantastic shapes.

Composed of hydrogen and calcium in gaseous form, heated to the terrific temperature of about 10,000 degrees Fahrenheit, and expanding at a rate of 125 miles a second, some form great arches above the sun's surface, while other look like the "set pieces" of fireworks displays.

Movies of two new types of these prominences, recently discovered, were shown. One is known as the "coronal type," with clouds of gas seeming to appear above the sun from somewhere out in space and falling in great showers into the sun; the other, the "surge type," boils and surges up like a geyser from the sun's surface.

Dr. McMath also showed movies of the moon which revealed how the earth's satellite would look from a distance of only 200 miles, with vast craters and mountain ranges clearly outlined. The creeping shadows of sunrise and sunset could be easily seen moving across the lunar landscape.

Seal Upholds D. C.'s Right to Limit Parking

Farmers' Claim to Space for Marketing Purposes Held Unfounded.

The District Commissioners have full authority to regulate the parking of all vehicles on the streets adjacent to the Western Market, Corporation Counsel Elwood H. Seal stated yesterday.

The contention has been presented to the Commissioners that Congress has "indicated the intention that 15 feet of the street should be set aside for use of farmers at the Western Market," Seal stated.

The controversy resulted when police indicated they would invoke a traffic regulation which would prohibit head-in parking near the market.

The farmers complained that if parallel parking was inforced near the market it would work a great handicap, since parallel parking would not permit as many farmers accommodations as does head-in parking.

Representative Howard Smith (Democrat), Virginia, appeared at a public hearing last month, when District officials met to determine the status of the parking at the market, and brought up the question of the "15 feet for use by the farmers."

Hats, Dresses Are Priced at Wage Parley

Employers Deny Plan to Take Tips Away From Waitresses.

Evidence in the shape of women's garments was introduced yesterday by employer representatives at the minimum wage conference which is attempting to set a legal wage for female employes in the hotel, restaurant and allied industries.

The employer group earlier in the week had submitted three separate budgets for women under this classification.

Kitchen help, dish and glass washers, bus girls, clean-up help, maids, cleaners and charwomen should not spend more than $1.19 weekly for clothes, the employers contended.

However, waitresses, counter and salad girls, food checkers, telephone and elevator operators were allowed $1.94 weekly for their clothes.

Members of the Minimum Wage Board were confronted with the list of clothes, which included three hats (two at $1 and one at $1.98), two summer dresses (at $1.56 each), three nightgowns (each at 49 cents), and other intimate articles.

In the meantime, Claude H. Woodward, who represents the employers on the board, issued the following statement regarding waitresses tips:

"In explaining a guaranteed wage, we at no time stated or intended to state, that the employer would collect from the waitress any part of her tips. We merely suggested that the waitress would report the amount of tips received, as she does at the present time for unemployment insurance, for a record of her earnings.

"Under the suggested guaranteed wage the employer would guarantee earnings equal to the minimum wage. All earnings in tips, whether they exceeded this amount or not would, of course, be kept by the waitress. If her earnings in cash, meals and tips dropped below the minimum wage the employer would make up the difference. This would not in any way disturb the present system of tipping."

The next meeting of the conference was scheduled for Monday.

Doyle Will Quit Jobless Board

The District Unemployment Compensation Board yesterday announced acceptance of the resignation of Robert E. Doyle, jr., as deputy director of the board.

Without commenting on the reason for the resignation, the board stated that Doyle's services terminated January 1, although the resignation will become effective February 28. It was explained that he had two months of time under accrued overtime work and annual leave.

John A. Marshall, board director, also announced that approximately 60 persons had been hired recently to work in connection with the applications for payment of unemployment compensation.

The 'Old West' Features Bill At the Capitol

"THE BAD MAN OF BRIMSTONE." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of a story by J. Walter Ruben and Maurice Rapf, adapted to the screen by Cyril Hume and Richard Maibaum, starring Wallace Beery, with Virginia Bruce, Dennis O'Keefe, Lewis S. Stone, Bruce Cabot, Guinn Williams, Noah Beery, Charles Grapewin, Joseph Calleia, Gus Kibbee, Clif Edwards, Arthur Hohl, John Qualen and Robert Barrat. Directed by J. Walter Ruben. Reviewed Friday afternoon by Mary Harris. At Loew's Capitol Theater.

Up with the hoss opera! Down with civilization! That is if they keep on puttin out more hot ones like "Bad Man of Brimstone."

This one should put Wallace Berry right back where he belongs—on top, an eminence recently forfeited by the semi-respectable, semi-lovable roles dealt out to the big old rascal.

Wally, as Brimstone's best man, is the most poisonous cuss who ever forded the Gail. He is a treacherous, nervy, thieving, double-crossing, hard-drinking, card-marking, cattle-rustling, careless-spitting low-downer.

He'd just as soon plug you with his forty-five as take a drink with you, and he'd have no fool moral prejudices about letting in the light through your back or bending his gun over your head while you are off guard, this latter being an act of pure kindness. Yes Sah, Wally is a combination of sudden death, King Kong and Ol' Man River.

Celebrates Vital Era.

Though "Bad Man of Brimstone" falls right under what the knowing call "horse opera," there is real reason to find fault with this wise-crack classification. The Old West, "swift and hard to beat" (credit to Alfred Henry Lewis) represents one of the most vital periods of American history. Its appeal to the people is shown by the fact that cheap "Westerns" ground out by cheap motion picture companies have been a standard commercial product these many years. The best brains of the motion picture business are apparently beginning to cash in on this rather obvious thought.

The epic of Brimstone's leading bad man is a gratifying result. And the field is really untapped, because the cheaper "Westerns" were (and are) hopelessly patterned.

Though "Bad Man of Brimstone" is Wally Beery's show, the cast is plenty remarkable and smart as a bunch of paint ponies. Joseph Calleia as "Portugee Ben" and Bruce Cabot as "Black Jack" rate the top honors. But not more than a couple of inches behind them are fine old Louis Stone as the drinking judge; Guinn Williams, Noah Beery, Cliff Edwards (who wails the darnedest ballad), Guy Kibbee, Raymond Hatton and Charles Grapewin, not to mention a flock of the toughest looking hombres who ever rode west of the Pecos. The bunch of them make up a mosaic of the Old West.

The love interest? There you have us, podner. Virginia Bruce does as well as any actress we can call to mind, but still—perhaps the answer is that the Old West was a man's world. Her leading man, Dennis O'Keefe, is a fine, likely, long-legged lad with excellent flashes of acting.

But "Bad Man of Brimstone" goes right down on the "must" list of anyone who values amusement. When the picture is over you will feel like "Portugee Ben" when he clicks out and breathes with a smile, "Life, she is like that. She is over before she begin."

Stage Headlines Hollywood.

It's hard to say it, but those popular and highly clever Hollywoodites, Jack La Rue and Vince Barnett, rate the same as many other "personal appearance" acts—a good spanking for not spending more than 15 minutes in getting their act together. The highlight of the act was Mr. La Rue's brief excerpt from "Blood and Sand." The rest was kindergarten, not even passable for the first-grade playlet, at the end of the school year.

That blonde snippet, Ruth Barnes, rates top honors in the stage show. Not only is she an accomplished tap dancer, but a perfect little mistress of comedy. Every step has a meaning all its own, as Ruth does it.

Metropolitan

"DR. SYN." Gaumont British picturization of a novel by Russell Thorndyke, starring George Arliss, with Margaret Lockwood, John Loder, Roy Emerson, Graham Moffett, Frederick Burtwell, George Merritt, Athole Stewart, Wilson Coleman, Wally Patch and Meinhart Maur. Directed by Roy Neill. Reviewed Friday afternoon by Sally Stroud. At the Metropolitan Theater.

"Doctor Syn" is melodrama with an authentic early eighteenth-century flavor. It has George Arliss playing a dual role with his usual restrained elegance, plus some hair-raising episodes of life among smugglers.

No quarrel can be raised with it, unless one prefers the streamlined models of California to the rather dignified English photoplay's manner of telling a story. It contains humor, contributed by Mr. Arliss, a fat boy and numerous participants in the play. It has romance, contributed by luscious young Margaret Lockwood and stalwart young John Loder. It has intrigue, horror, suspense, local color, and about all the other ingredients one usually finds in the Gaumont-British "action story." The subtlety of their blending is almost marred by a hideous musical score which rather scratchily follows the story.

Mr. Arliss is Captain Clegg, pirate, and Dr. Syn, curate. Left for dead on the scaffold, he is cared for by his faithful ship's captain and comes to a small village to become a sort of clerical Robin Hood for his impoverished parishioners. His daughter is raised there, and things run smoothly for Doctor Syn until a band of government revenuers sail into port to search for smuggled liquors.

The villagers have clever, devious manners of working and concealing their work from those among them who are not in the smuggling band. Captained by a cannily suspicious gentleman who almost catches Dr. Syn, and does reveal his true identity, the smugglers cause much rushing about in the night, during which two murders are perpetrated.

Horrible to behold is The Mulatto, who was one of Capt. Clegg's victims in his days of piracy. Attached to the captain's retinue, the Mulatto is constantly hurling harpoons in windows at Dr. Syn, whom he knows to be the former pirate. He is burned when the villagers destroy their store of liquor to prevent the captain's finding it. Whoops! More fun than a serial back in Pearl White days!

Nelson B. Bell About The Showshops

'The Hurricane,' at Palace, Is Vivid Masterpiece; Earle Presents an Historic Epic in 'Wells Fargo'

Devastating Storm Scenes Mark Climax of Play of South Seas.

"THE HURRICANE." Samuel Goldwyn's picturization for United Artists of the story by Charles Nordhoff and James Norman Hall, adapted to the screen by Dudley Nichols, featuring Jon Hall and Dorothy Lamour, with Thomas Mitchell, C. Aubrey Smith, Mary Astor, Raymond Massey, John Carradine, Jerome Cowan, Spencer Charters, Inez Courtney, Al Kikume, Reri and Kunulei De Cleroq. Directed by John Ford. At Loew's Palace Theater.

In "The Hurricane," Washington theatergoers will encounter a screen subject not quite like any other ever before recorded on celluloid.

BELL.

While the film's overwhelming claim to technical perfection in the simulation of a catastrophic debauch of nature in the South Seas must linger in memory as its chief mortgage on realistic sensationalism and unforgettable violence, sight should not be lost of the fact that before the storm sequences in the story ever are reached there has been impressed upon the gelatins a "human interest" drama of the first rank.

"The Hurricane," as written in their crisp, short-sentence style by Charles Nordhoff and James Norman Hall, authors of "Mutiny on the Bounty" and its sequels, concerns itself in large measure with the conflict between Terangi, chief figure in the narrative, and the organized forces of society exercising the French code of legal behavior in one of the world's remote outposts. The picture adheres with unusual fidelity to the characterization and incident of the book. Its preliminary footage is devoted to the exciting experience of Terangi in his rebellion against laws he cannot understand and has no will to violate—but always does, until prison sentences of many years grow out of initial penalties that are measured only in weeks and months.

Is Personalized Drama.

There is, of course, a fine field for tense and engrossing drama in this counterpointing of opposed civilizations. "The Hurricane" makes the most of its opportunities before its horrendous cyclone sequences ever are begun. It depicts with fine detail a romantic, melodramatic and highly pitched recital of events that need no upheaval of nature to make them fascinating as faithful reflections of a primitive people's revolt against socialized restrictions they can neither comprehend nor condone and forceful elements of personalized drama.

When the fury of the hurricane once gets underway, however, the magnificent display of elemental power is such as to dwarf humankind to the puny dimensions of a complete and inescapable futility.

It is useless to attempt a description of the hurricane in "The Hurricane." It must be permitted to stand as the supreme achievement of the cinema in producing effects that are as devastating as they are incomprehensible to the layman. I would not be too sure that Goldwyn has not outdone nature in his visualization of the terrific forces of wind and sea on a rampage. The storm is prolonged until the violent footage may prove too much for the susceptible nerves of sensitive spectators. The roar of the tempest, the demolition of a once beautiful and fertile island and the salvage of only a few souls out of a considerable population must stand as one of the imposing monuments to the screen's unmeasured ability to create unparalleled havoc.

The individual performances that lend "The Hurricane" a distinction that is wholly apart from its spectacular grandeur necessarily are largely obscured by the sensationalism of the picture's climax. It is worth pointing out, nevertheless, that in Jon Hall, the young man who has been assigned to the role of Terangi, Producer Goldwyn has unearthed a potential star who bears a striking resemblance to Douglas Fairbanks, jr., in many of his more animated poses, possesses the swimming prowess of a Johnny Weissmuller and the physical endowments of an Adonis. In the opposite role, Dorothy Lamour, as Marama, steps another rung up the ladder of eminence, as one of the film's most promising young actresses.

Mitchell Tops Support.

There are many other who contribute to the forcefulness of this extraordinary production. Foremost among them I should rate Thomas Mitchell, in the role of Dr. Kersaint, one of the most picturesque characters the silver sheet recently has revealed. Another is C. Aubrey Smith, the Father Paul of the tale. Still others are Mary Astor, Raymond Massey, the Bessemer Steel governor of the islands; John Carradine, duplicating the offensive efficiency of his performance in "The Prisoner of Shark Island," and Jerome Cowan, enjoying his best assignment to date as the young ship's commander, who plays so important a part in the working out of a story that combines every element of colorful and deeply moving drama. The native ensemble affords a completely believable Polynesian background for the major movements of the play.

As a secondary feature on the new bill at the Palace is to be found Jimmy Fidler's "Personality Parade" of the motion picture colony, an impressive resume of the cinema's development of popular figures who have left their imprint indelibly fixed upon public consciousness. The Post columnist has done a comprehensive and nostalgic job in fashioning this subject, of which more will appear in this space at a later date.

Lake, adapted to the screen by Paul Schofield, Gerald Geraghty and Frederick Jackson, featuring Joel McCrea, Frances Dee and Bob Burns, with Lloyd Nolan, Henry O'Neill, Porter Hall, Robert Cummings, Ralph Morgan, Mary Nash, Johnny Mack Brown and Barlowe Moreland, Frank Conroy, Brandon Tynan, Stanley Fields, Frank McGlynn and an ensemble of thousands. Directed by Frank Lloyd. At the Earle Theater.

Spanning a quarter-century of the picturesque development of a continent of wilderness and inaccessibility into a Nation of accelerated transportation and closely-knit contact, "Wells Fargo" takes its place among the screen's epic pictures of America's greatness.

It is no simple task to constrict 25 years into the comparatively brief running time of two hours, but Director-Producer Frank Lloyd has accomplished the feat with a well-sustained flow of dramatic narrative and a sweeping apprehension of the major incidents in the emergence of the United States from a vast expanse of "wide open spaces" into a compact entity dedicated to the rigid observance of law and order.

To do this he has judiciously plucked from a maze of incident and adventure those salient highlights of a troubled era that witnessed the preservation of the Union, the charting of wagon trails and pony express routes from the Mississippi to San Francisco and the heroism of courageous men and women who perceived the future destinies of a great Nation and played an active part in their realization.

Gives Credit Where Due.

There is little in "Wells Fargo" that is too idealistic. It is a direct and powerful recapitulation of a pioneer enterprise that played a more important part in the establishment of the country than most people realize. Wells and Fargo, blazers of the trail of transcontinental transport and communication, were as much a part of the national development as the Federal establishment itself. This is made clear in the film's stirring exposition of all hazards of "wild and woolly" pioneer days, including the frenzies precipitated by the California gold rush, the breaking of the plains, the supercedence of the old waterways by overland travel and the outbreak and culmination of the War Between the States. All of these are vital elements of a story that is melodramatic, tender, brutal and sensational by turns.

These divergent ramifications of his basic plot have been welded into a direct and unbroken narrative of humor, pathos and excitement by the veteran director who already has such fine examples of "mass drama" to his credit as "The Sea Hawk" and "Cavalcade." Mr. Lloyd would have made a fine editor. His gift lies as much in knowing what to omit from his rehabilitation of epochal events as what to include. There is a fine diversity in the disclosures of his present play, which embraces the years between the wild 1840's to the more subdued 1870's in this Nation's history.

To achieve this unification of effect, a huge cast has been recruited to lend life and reality to an epic undertaking. The entire roster of principals engaged in this flamboyant and far-flung enterprise consumes two whole pages of closely printed names, with two columns to a page. It will suffice for the purposes of this sketchy commentary to recite only that the dozen or so vital figures concerned in the furtherance of the story's basic theme are portrayed by artists of excellent selection.

Joel McCrea, as the young protege of the visionary Wells and Fargo, who was most actively concerned in putting their fantastic enterprises into successful operation, does perhaps the best work he ever has brought to the screen. The impingement of his business concerns upon a romantic home life lends the fabric of the play a substance it otherwise would not possess. As his adoring, but seemingly treacherous young wife, Frances Dee, Mrs. McCrea in private life, also takes on new stature as an actress. But it is Bob Burns who turns in the picturesque and humorous performance of outstanding merit, strikingly in the deliberate and dry manner of the late Will Rogers. As Hank York, the drawling Burns is well-nigh perfect.

Support and Supplementaries.

There are so many others who lend sterling talents to the rounding of this expansive historical document that to single out favorites would be to fly directly into the face of widespread public preferences and prejudices. Lloyd Nolan and Porter Hall, two road agents turned "bankers;" Robert Cummings, as usual a symbol of youthful frustration; Ralph Morgan, Mary Nash, John Mack Brown, Henry O'Neill, as one of the titular firm; Frank Conroy, Stanley Fields and a host of others all do such splendid work that there is little to choose among them. Photographically, "Wells Fargo" is a superb exhibit of perfected artistry.

The program's fortunate unity is well maintained by the presentation of a "Revels on the Range" revue, participated in by the clever array of specialists and a nimble chorus, all done up in the sombreros, chaps, leather jackets and whatnot of the West. This coteries of adept vaudevillians is led by Louise Massey and "The Westerners," in a group of their typical songs of the plains—with the usual violin, guitar, piano accordion and bass viol accompaniment. They were a hit yesterday just as they always are on any Washington stage.

Others on the living bill include the Stanley Brothers, Monroe and Grant; Nadine Gae and her dancing girls and probably a few who have escaped memory as this is written.

An interesting issue of the Paramount News and a Vitaphone short subject complete one of the Earle's most notable programs.

Pilot Race.

Both Clark Gable and Spencer Tracy are racing to see who will be first to obtain necessary solo flying hours for a pilot's license during the making of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "Test Pilot."

In Hollywood

With JIMMY FIDLER

Hollywood, Jan. 7.—Idol Chatter: The accent of most English actors—and all actors who would be English—grows thicker with each additional year spent in Hollywood. Getting personal: I wish Anita Louise would stop chewing gum—she is With Caliban Barrymore spending an hour a day in the studio gym. Filmville's gossip gatherers cannot decide whether to laugh or tremble. Hollywood heroes: Charles Butterworth, bravely consoling himself with the legend that only brainy men become prematurely bald. Someone really should speak to Fanny Brice about those green slacks she wears a-shopping.

CHARLES BUTTERWORTH

Edward G. Robinson always shudders when someone tells a gruesome tale—and Eddie a gangster type, too! For my admission fee, I would prefer Mae West without the brunette wig she wears in her new shocker. There are girls who look cute with their heads swathed in bandannas—but Joan Blondell is not one. Today's prophecy: Jane Froman, if given a decent role, can become the screen's No. 1 songstar.

• • • •

Give Walter Pidgeon an opening and he will invariably tell you about his diet—nothing but assorted fruit juices on the seventh day of each week. With America and England turning thumbs down on everything Japanese, "Mr. Moto" will probably become a Korean in his future pictures. In the Hollywood slanguage: A "canary" is any squeaking sound picked up by the microphones. Today's short-short interview—with John Boles: "I wonder why my voice always sounds so much better when I sing in the shower?"

• • • •

This town is screwy—and I can prove it. For instance, consider the case of a talented young singer named Gordon Miller. Months ago he was given a Universal contract. Under studio orders, he rushed pell-mell to Hollywood. And, once here, he was promptly forgotten. Once a week he stopped by the studio, identified himself to the paymaster and picked up his check. But no roles came his way. Finally, tired of loafing, Miller landed a week's engagement in a night club and followed that with an appearance in a downtown theater. A Universal talent scout heard him sing and filed an ecstatic report with the studio. "Sign him!" ordered the big boss—only to discover that Mr. Miller already had a Universal contract. Now he is being touted in the studio's publicity as a brand-new find!

In my mail this morning is a red-hot letter from a lady in Topeka who breathes fire and brimstone because she has discovered that movie stars' autographs, on fan photos, are usually phony. She cries for vengeance because the letters, supposedly written by stars in answer to their fan mail are actually written by secretaries. Alas, her charges are true. But I wonder if the lady has ever considered the facts. A star like Ginger Rogers often receives as many as 5,000 fan letters a week, each one demanding a signed photograph and a reply. Allowing two days a week for the treatment of writer's cramp, that means 1,000 letters a day. I wish the lady in Topeka would spend one solid industrious hour scribbing "Sincerely yours, Ginger Rogers"—and then write me another letter.

• • • •

Speaking of fan mail reminds me of a chuckler Tyrone Power told me at luncheon today. A couple of months ago while he was flying to New York, a tragic plane crash filled the headlines. When his plane landed in Newark, a telegraph messenger stepped up and handed him a telegram. It read: "Thank God you are safe. Have just heard from air disaster. Good luck. A fan." "Very thoughtful," I commented. Tyrone grinned. "Yeah," he said. "It was sent collect!"

See Jimmy Fidler's "Personality Parade," picture album of the screen's great stars, today at Loew's Palace Theater.

Trans-Lux

Again "The March of Time" takes top place at the Trans-Lux Theater for the current week. Radio's famous comedy team and others spill plenty of fun under the title of "The Laugh Industry."

Joseph H. Kennedy, maritime commissioner, tackles the United States merchant marine situation.

Thrills aplenty surround the short entitled "Killer of the Tonto," depicting the chase and capture of a cattle-killing mountain lion in southern Arizona.

The usual "Highlights in the News" run the gamut of vivid information. Everything from justices of the Supreme Court to Al Smith, King Carol and beloved Senator Glass take their place in the reel.

Polo games, training of sled dogs, hockey, fashions and the New York poultry show round out the news, plus speedboat trials at Miami.

The ever-present Walt Disney cartoon is the best ever. It is entitled "Pluto's Judgment Day," and, to put it mildly, it is a riot.

Tennis Enthusiast.

Walter Huston has "sold" Clarence Brown on tennis. Brown has a beautiful tennis court at his Calabasas ranch, which his guests use, while he has never played. Huston, an ardent tennis fan, visiting the ranch, so enthused Brown over the game that the director of "Benefits Forgot" is arranging to take lessons and learn to use his own tennis court.

RKO-Keith's

Fred Astaire once more has danced his way into a second week at RKO-Keith's.

This time the vehicle of his personal triumph is "A Damsel in Distress," a whimsical thing from the pen of that adept at swagger comedy, Mr. Pelham Granville Wodehouse, who not only wrote the original story but also had a finger in its adaptation to the screen. The musical background was supplied by the late George Gershwin and includes four songs that are worthy of note and a vagrant whistle or two. They are "Nice Work If You Can Get It," "A Foggy Day," "I Can't Be Bothered Now" and "Things Are Looking Up."

The agile Mr. Astaire is supported by a nice cast in this one—Gracie Allen and George Burns, Joan Fontaine, Reginald Gardiner, Ray Noble and his orchestra, Constance Collier, Montagu Love, Harry Matson and Jan Duggan. George Stevens directed. His "drum dance" may not be quite up to the level of the best he has done in other films, but no apologies need be made for the star whose slowest steps outpace the swiftest of all of his contemporaries among the "hoofers."

The bill is completed by a generous allotment of short-reel subjects and the latest issue of the Pathe News.

Thrill Kiss.

Ted Pearson, screen actor and radio announcer, claims he got the biggest thrill of his life when in "Test Pilot," Pearson was to kiss Myrna Loy in a scene. "I hope we'll have rehearsals," he said. But it was a one-take, with no rehearsals.

New York, Jan. 7.

ROBERT JACKSON: Max Gordon, who visited President Roosevelt at the White House last week, was another who complained of monopoly. "Somebody's got a monopoly on the loose dough," Gordon sighed. "I need a million dollars to produce the movie version of 'The Women.'" Roosevelt seriously advised him to go to Dutchess County, N. Y., "where I'm sure you can raise $40,000 of it." . . . Mayor Hague: Frontier Films, which incurred the wrath of Japan for screening a pro-China movie, and the wrath of Germany and Italy for producing a Spanish loyalist film, is completing the Rome-Tokio-Berlin-Jersey City axis. It will take movies of your anti-labor meeting. And Heywood Broun will attend.

When he discovered who the baby was, he refused to look at the picture.

PARAMOUNT FILMS: Altho' Anita Colby has been offered a month of screen testing, with all fares and expenses paid, her ma won't let her return to Hollywood, demanding that she terminate her film career.

GARY COOPER: Too bad that your new picture, "Marco Polo," still isn't finished. "Is it true," Sam Goldwyn was asked, "that you've tried five different endings to 'Marco Polo,' and can't find a good one?" . . . "It's not the endings that's troubling us," Goldwyn confessed. "We can't find a good beginning!"

CLIFTON WEBB: Cole Porter is working now, composing the score for your play, "Candlelight." He's had a special piano built in his Waldorf suite—a piano built across his wheelchair, so that his legs still can be outstretched . . . Porter, incidentally, received a strange wire from Sam Katz, M.-G.-M producer. It read: "You will be proud of 'Rosalie.' It is even more pretentious than 'The Great Ziegfeld!'" . . . Pan-American Airways: Although Alexander Korda is sailing for Europe Wednesday, he flew to Havana this week and refused to state his reason. He's going to Havana to stock up on a supply of the special cigars he smokes—cigars he can't buy in Europe.

John L. Lewis: Morris Ernst, on behalf of the C. I. O., will have your literature distributed at all ferry and tube stations leading to Jersey City, where Hague's meeting will be held. LaGuardia has agreed not to arrest any of the literature distributors.

APOSTOLI T.K.O.'S STEELE!

The Washington Post Sports

*X WASHINGTON: SATURDAY, JANUARY 8, 1938 15

Savage Bout Halted in 9th; Champ Hurt

Titleholder Given Rest After Claim of Foul; Out on His Feet.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Madison Square Garden, N. Y., Jan. 7.—Freddie Apostoli, former San Francisco bellhop, became the uncrowned middleweight champion of the world tonight when he batted out a ninth-round technical knockout over the champion, Freddie Steele. Referee Arthur Donovan stepped between the rivals after 54 seconds of the round and waved the eager California puncher away from his groggy, staggering opponent.

With a series of lefts and rights to the head and body, the like of which the Garden ring has not seen in years, Apostoli avenged a technical knockout at the hands of Steele early in his professional career and was measuring the game, but thoroughly weakened, champion for the knockout when Donovan stopped the action.

From the echo of the opening bell, it was a punch-for-punch battle, every inch the "natural" that had been forecast. Steele held his own in the opening round, but from that point to the time he was mercifully spared the ten-count, Apostoli had the situation in hand. However, some scoresheets gave Steele three rounds.

The defeat was only the third in 137 fights for the champion and Apostoli's twenty-eighth victory in 30 starts.

Steele "Cut Up."

Steele finished the battle with a badly cut-up face while the California boy came out without a mark.

There was considerable dispute over a low blow which Apostoli landed in the seventh, jack-knifing the champion. Steele tried to claim foul and staggered about the ring doubled up, but Donovan warned him to continue fighting or he would lose immediately on a technical knockout. The period served as a rest for the weary champion.

This low blow came early, just after Steele had risen from the canvas, where he had been bumped—rather than punched—by Apostoli when he rushed out of his corner at the opening gong. Referee Donovan took the round away from Apostoli on a foul.

Steele's manager, Eddie Miller, blamed the outcome entirely on a low blow. Miller was uncertain whether he would give Apostoli a return match with the title officially at stake. Apostoli's manager, Larry White, said Apostoli would demand the champion's end of the purse for any title match.

The middleweights came out fighting in every sense of the word. Making good the "grude" angle that was played up in the publicity for the nontitle battle, the rivals did not take the usual "feel out" in the first round. Instead, they brought their best punches into play with Apostoli's left earning him an even break with the champion.

In the second round, however, Apostoli connected with a right cross to the jaw that shook Steele and forced him to the ropes where the San Francisco boy caught the champion with several lefts, one of which opened a cut on Steele's nose. Apostoli was charging Steele continually at the bell and won the round.

Despite the fact that Steele was bothered by his injured nose, the champion came back strong in the third and brought his right to Apostoli's chin several times but the challenger did not stop forcing the action. He sent his left into Steele's nose continually toward the end of the round.

After a rather tame fourth round, the two went to work with a vengeance in the following session. Apostoli continually carried the fight to the champion, slamming him with lefts and rights but Steele came back fighting after each flurry of the Californian.

Steele on Defensive.

The fifth found Steele on the defensive for the most part and for the first time appeared to be tiring. Apostoli began using his right more at this stage and got in several hard smashes to his rival's jaw. The sixth round found Apostoli taking a wide lead. He rushed Steele all over the ring, staggering his left in the champion's face and bringing over his right. The bell revealed a tiring Steele.

Apostoli came out swinging lefts and rights to the champion's body and head with a terrific flurry at the start of the seventh round, and the champion was shoved to the floor. Steele doubled up from a right to the stomach and Referee Arthur Donovan stepped between them. after a short delay, the Californian went to work again and soon had Steele definitely on the way to defeat. The blow was ruled foul and cost Apostoli the round.

Steele's experience and courage saved him from losing in the eighth round. Aposolti charged him time and again, swinging rights and lefts to the head and jaw and had the champion hanging on at the bell. The final round found Steele unable to back away from the former bellhop, who battered him from one side of the ring to the other, opening cuts on the champion's face with virtually every smash.

A crowd of 9,000 saw the scheduled 12-round nontitle battle and Apostoli entered the ring a 13-to-5 underdog in the wagering.

1,200 See City Series Inaugural

Woodrow Wilson Loses, 17-11; Central Nosed Out by One Point.

By Jack Munhall.

In the opening doubleheader of the interhigh basketball series viewed by 1,200 spectators last night in the Tech gym, Tech easily whipped Woodrow Wilson, 17-11, and Defending Champion Western nosed out Central, 20-19, in a thrilling fray.

The games were different in every conceivable way. After Wilson and Tech had staggered through a dull, listless contest, Central and Western came up with a real old-fashioned drama in which the lead changed hands twice in the final two minutes. Leading all the way after amassing a 12-3 advantage in the first quarter, Western faltered in the stretch to allow the ever-battling Mount Pleasant quintet a chance to save what had appeared a hopelessly-lost game. And Central almost did just that.

Leonard Sokol, proving a fine "money player," went to work on a 14-9 deficit, when he sank a lengthy set shot. John Fanning, blond center, followed suit with a short heave and Central was closer to the front runner than ever before. Len Stanton, Western's towering pivot man, tossed in a follow shot to boost the margin to 16-13 but again Sokol heaved in a pot shot, this time from the center of the floor and Central trailed by one point with two minutes to go.

Halloran Is Hero.

But after Sokol pushed in a sensational one-hand shot from the side of the court, Bob Halloran, who has played a minor role in the game thus far, stepped up to become the hero, sinking the winning basket one-half minute before the game-ending gun. Shortly after Fanning missed by the roll of the ball a pivot shot after taking a pass from Ed Waters.

It was truly a tough loss for Central to swallow as the Northwest lads took the floor a decided underdog and gave the champs almost as much as they could successfully handle.

Stanton, with 8 points, was the leading scorer, but Sokol, also turning in an impressive floor performance, proved the outstanding man on the court.

Triumph for Kessler.

Tech's victory was a personal triumph for little Bruce Kessler, entering into his first year as coach, for he saw two complete teams alternate at playing with equal success and win going away. Several potential stars were uncovered by McKinley, Walter Connolly, of All-High football fame, working with the team which played in the first and third periods, scored five points and emerged as the high-point scorer.

Other Techites who showed promise were Moe Tannebum and Leroy Curtis, diminutive forwards, and Vic DeLeon, towering center, whose floor play especially was fine.

Wilson was a keen disappointment. Its shooting was semicomical and although it unloosed numerous set heaves, did not even make one. In fact, when the boys hit the rim or the backboard it was something of an accomplishment. In the opinion of observers, the Presidents were very nervous and played far below their normal pace.

Tech showed a stiff defense which

Thomson, Goggin Lead Los Angeles Open

By the Associated Press.

Los Angeles, Jan. 7.—Jimmy Thomson and Willie Goggin forged to the front today in the first round of the $5,000 Los Angeles open golf tournament.

Thomson, the siege gun from Shawnee, Pa., turned in a spectacular 65 for the par 71-Woodrow Wilson course, missing a 1-foot putt on the eighteenth green to tie the course record of 64 hung up by Horton Smith one year ago.

Goggin, veteran San Francisco pro, quit the 18 holes with a 65 scored on the par 72-Harding course, companion battleground of the Griffith Park layout, scene of the thirteenth annual tournament.

Most of the day's low scores were collected on the Harding course. The split field will change courses in tomorrow's 18-hole round.

Trailing three strokes behind Goggin and Thomson was a group of contestants, including Abe Espinosa, Shreveport, La.; Harold "Jug" McSpaden, Winchester, Mass.; Bruce McCormick, Los Angeles, national public links champion; Henry Picard, Hershey, Pa.; Ben Colirin, San Francisco; Lloyd Mangrum, Dayton, Ohio, and Zell Eaton, Oklahoma City.

Playing in the same threesome, Thomson and Sammy Snead, the long hitter from White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., attracted the major gallery of the afternoon. Snead consistently outdrove Thomson, but was not as straight off the tee. Snead took 38-35—73, to Jimmy's 32-33—65.

Bitsy Grant In Biltmore Net Finals

By the Associated Press.

Coral Cables, Fla., Jan. 7.—Bryan M. (Bitsy) Grant, Atlanta's mighty tennis mite, stroked his way into the Miami Biltmore tournament finals today with a four-set marathon victory over Elwood Cooke, of Portland, Ore.

Grant's 9—7, 9—7, 3—6, 7—5 triumph placed him in Sunday's final against the winner of a semifinal match tomorrow between Top-seeded Bobby Riggs, of Chicago, and young Frank Kovacs, of Oakland, Calif.

Grant, ranked fourth nationally, fired tennis balls at Cooke for three hours before emerging the victor in a baseline duel.

Cooke, No. 28 on the national ranking list, almost matched Grant at his own game. Known as one of the greatest retrievers in the history of the sport, Grant was amazed to see the balls come pouring back at him. Each simply hit the ball back until the other erred, and Grant won because he made the fewer mistakes.

Bitsy, admittedly out of condition, grunted with nearly every shot and suffered cramps near the end. Constantly talking to himself in true Grant fashion, he protested several close decisions and complained about a brisk wind that swept the court.

"She blows! she blows! she blows!" he shouted once after netting the ball.

With the score 5-all in the second set, the players took turns breaking services until Grant finally held his own at love.

Cooke came from behind at 1—2 in the third set, won four straight games, lost to Grant's service and held his own to send the match past the intermission.

3 Swim Matches Keep Coach Busy

This week-end will be a busy one for Paul Wilson, coach of the Western High, Wilson High and Y. M. C. A. senior swimming teams, with all three of these teams slated for action today.

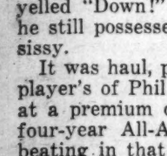
The Wilson High natators will meet the Baltimore City College swimmers in the Y. M. C. A. pool at 11 a. m.; Western High leaves town for a 2 o'clock engagement with Massanutten Military Academy, and the "Y" mermen will climax activities for the day by meeting the Baltimore Y. M. H. A. tankmen in Baltimore at 8 p. m.

This Morning..

With Shirley Povich

"Philip King, 65," reads a line in the fine type and cold matter-of-factness of this morning's death notices.

And elsewhere, in the compendium of the day's news, the story of Philip King, merchant prince of Seventh street, is told. But the sports pages, too, have a powerful claim to the obituary of Phil King.



POVICH.

Let's turn back the clock a small matter of 45 years. Crack-pots were meddling with some kind of a fool horseless carriage, General Coxey was leading a tattered army of 2,000 unemployed into Washington and, for want of a better excuse for the authorities, was getting arrested for walking on the grass at the Capitol; the gay blades of the nineties were being enraptured by the gyrations of "Little" Egypt at the Chicago World Exposition, Grover Cleveland was in the White House . . .

And young Phil King was an All-American quarterback at Princeton.

That was 1893 and football was being played in the raw without benefit of professional coaches, without the high-pressure ballyhoo, without expensive uniforms, with none of the Roman holiday trappings that make of present-day football a spectacle that relegates the actual combat to a marginal note.

* * * *

Four-Time All-American

When the books are closed and the final appraisal is made of all Washington athletes, the name of Phil King will be occupying a lofty place in the reckoning. The white-haired, venerably rugged gentleman who died yesterday at his allotted three-score-and-five wrote a stirring chapter for himself in athletics.

Not once, but four times, was he selected as the All-American quarterback of football. And those days of 1890-91-92-93 were not the days of synthetic All-American teams. Phil King was the choice each year of Walter Camp, daddy of the official All-Americans, and twice he captained the Princeton teams.

There was no cry of over-emphasis or subsidization when Phil King came out of Central High School in 1890 and entered Princeton that fall. Much concerning football was informal. A team's captain was also its coach. The referee didn't annoy himself with yard markers. He simply dropped his handkerchief where the ball was last put in play and let it go at that. The field was 110 yards long and the teams played two 90-minute halves. Wednesdays and Saturdays were game days and a player wasn't down until he yelled "Down!" And the guy who shouted "Down!" while he still possessed a breath of strength was something of a sissy.

It was haul, push and maul, twice a week for the football player's of Phil King's day, and in an era when brawn was at a premium on the gridiron 160-pound Phil King was a four-year All-American. A tout ticker must have been beating in that small but apparently sturdy frame of Phil King.

Phil King was quarterbacking a Princeton team that day when a Harvard captain named King introduced the awful flying wedge. There was never an adequate defense for that wedge play, you remember, and it was finally legislated out of the game. And Phil King was in the Princeton backfield when helmets as yet were unknown to football players who depended on the shock-absorbing qualities of great thatches of hair to protect their conks. In 1891, King's first year with Princeton, a Harvard team introduced uniforms to football.

Saw First Noseguard Appear

Phil King was quarterbacking the Princeton team, too, when the first nose guard made its appearance. Edgar Allan (Pete) Poe, a Princeton freshman with King, suffered a compound fracture of the nose and somebody outfitted him with a guard made out of a ram's horn that fitted down upon the nose and was held in place by a rubber fixture inserted between the teeth. That first nose guard known to football still occupies a place in the Phil King trophy room.

It was rough, tough, the best football of its day, but it was crude. The spiral pass from the center to the backfield was unknown in Phil King's playing days. The center put the ball in play either by scuffling it back with his foot or rolling it into the quarterback's hands. Not until 30 years late was the huddle to come into the game.

King often spoke of one memorable Princeton-Navy game in the early nineties when the Midshipmen, for some reason, believed that the Princeton men were in possession of the Navy signals. So the Navy quarterback all day barked nautical terms to the Middie team. Princton was taken aback when the Navy captain yelled such unintelligible signals as "Hoist the mainsail! Haul in the jib-boom!

$2,000 Bid For Contract Of Local Boy

George Abrams, Middleweight, Sought by Jimmy Erwin.

By Bob Garrison.

Convinced that Georgie Abrams definitely is of championship calibre, Jimmy Erwin, nationally known fight manager, yesterday offered Syd Fishel, present manager of the local middleweight, $2,000 for his contract.

Abrams presently is training for his fifteenth professional bout, his meeting with Leo Red Finnigan, New Yorker, in the feature of Turner's weekly fight show at the Fourteenth and W streets arena, Monday.

Erwin has been watching the progress of the local Jewish favorite since he returned to this country in September from South Africa with Petey Sarron, former featherweight champion. After watching Abrams train in the Eleventh street gymnasium all week as he was directing the training of his heavyweight, Buck Everett, who also fights here Monday, Erwin decided to post a certified check for the above amount with Matchmaker Goldie Ahearn.

Fishel Declines Offer.

At first stunned by the offer, Fishel, who has brought Abrams from the amateurs and successfully guided him through the professional ranks to date, said:

"It's just about the most flattering thing that's happened to us since Georgie and I joined forces in May. If he's worth that much to Jimmy at this early stage of his career, he's potentially worth $50,000 to me. It was mighty nice of Jim to show such interest, but no thanks, I'll take my chances with George because I figure just as Jim apparently does. He's got the makings."

Erwin said he realized that it was no fabulous price with which he sought to tempt Fishel and, in rebuttal, said he would even be willing to pay that much for 75 per cent of the rights. His plans for Abrams

Washington and Lee Quint Defeats Maryland by 31-29

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Doremus Gymnasium, Lexington, Va., Jan. 7.—Washington and Lee basketball team, Southern Conference champions flashed some of last season's form in defeating the University of Maryland five, 31 to 29, in a nip-and-tuck battle here tonight. The Generals pulled away into a 9-point lead at half time but Charley Norton, Maryland's right guard and center, put the Terrapins back into the ball game in the second half, and in the closing minutes of the game it looked as if the Generals' lead would be overcome. Norton was high point man for the evening with 12 points.

Bob Spessard, co-captain of the Washington and Lee team and All-Southern center for the past two seasons, was held to 6 points by the close guarding of McCarthy and Norton.

The 6-foot-7-inch Spessard controlled the opening tip-off and Frazier passed the ball in under the basket to the lanky General center for the first score after 25 seconds of play.

Increased Weights for Jockeys Boomed.

By Jack Cuddy.

New York, Jan. 7.—Five pounds of flesh will give the jockeys a new lease on life:

At last the guys who run the race tracks are going to consider something that may help the youngsters in silks—the lads who sit on those postage stamp saddles and guide the gee-gees around the oval.

Ever since I can remember, I've heard that smoke screen of conversation thrown up by racing owners and officials about doing things "for the betterment of the breed" of horses. But I can't recall them ever talking of doing anything that might improve the breed of jockeys. Perhaps that's only natural, because most people bet on the horse, rather than the jockey.

• • • •

But now my Miami operatives inform me that the National Association of State Racing Commissioners will open their annual meeting at Miami Beach Monday, and that one of the most important subjects of the huddle will be the question of raising the scale of weights for horses of any age running in any kind of race from Santa Anita to Narragensett.

• • • •

That Florida conference will last four days, and I hope that when the racing brass hats hold their final banquet at the Roney Plaza Thursday night they will have permitted American jockeys to carry at least five more pounds.

• • • •

If you have known many of the little fellows who look so picturesque in their brave silks as they flaunt death or injury day after day in the thunder through the dirt—but who are such tragic figures as they grow older and heavier—you'll know what I mean.

• • • •

Most of these "up" lads become apprentices at 15 or 16 years of age—before they've had any chance to get an education or exposure to a trade. They start young because they're light when young. And unfortunately just when they become genuinely proficient riders, even though small of stature, age and weight creep up on them and they are relegated to the scrap heap because they no longer can keep pared down to the weight that will enable them to earn a living.

• • • •

In other countries, like France and England, I do not know if the race track moguls give off so much palaver about improving the breed, but they have tried to lengthen the career of the little felows who ride the horses. Their weight scales, all along the line, are higher than ours.

• • • •

In the United States it has been such a rarity to find a jockey past 30 still earning a living at his calling that everyone marvelled when Mack Garner, at 34, won the Kentucky Derby in 1934 on Mrs. Isabel Dodge Sloan's Cavalcade.

• • • •

But if the weight scale is boosted all along the line—I mean the entire weight that flat-racing horse must carry—jockey, saddle-bag lead, hood, muzzle, martingale, breastplate, etc.—it will give the jocks a new lease on life. It will enable most of them to ride until they are 35 and sometimes 40 without impairing their health in keeping their weight down. It will give owners and horses better riders. You won't see apprentice jocks listed as the outstanding riders of the year. And I don't think it will cut down on the times registered by the gee-gees over the various tracks.

Friends Bows In 48-10 Tilt

Led by Center Jack Morris, who scored 18 points, Montgomery-Blair High School completely outclassed Friends on the Friends' court yesterday to win a 48-10 decision.

The winners gave their entire squad of ten players a workout. Sills and McKay followed Norris in scoring, with 9 and 8 points, respectively. Martin, Friends' center, was outstanding for the losers, making two baskets.

Gelding 8th Winner for Jacobs Barn

N. Y. Trainer Leading; Pageboy Second to $9.30 Horse.

By the Associated Press.

Tropical Park, Fla., Jan. 7.—The magic charm of Trainer Hirsch Jacobs and the powerful riding of Eddie Arcaro again proved an unbeatable combination when Stocks drove up on the outside to win a photo decision over Paul Codd's Pageboy in the featured Pahokee purse here today. Jesse Spencer's Our Willie, fifth straight favorite to taste defeat, was beaten four lengths for the place.

Jacobs, who saddled the winner for his wife, is leading local conditioners with eight winners at the meeting, while Arcaro is making a valiant effort to catch up with the pacemaking Johnny Longden for riding honors. Jacobs and Arcaro scored triples the previous afternoon. Stocks was Arcaro's second winner today.

The Pillory gelding paid $9.30 and ran the fastest mile of the meeting—1:37-4-5. Jacobs now has five winners for 1938 and has a flying start toward becoming leading American trainer for the sixth consecutive year.

Those who backed Stocks were very anxious until the official numbers flashed showing their selection the winner. The camera saw the Jacobs colorbearer, which finished on the outside, first by the narrowest of margins. It was his third triumph in a row.

Sunphantom had the speed of the field and stole well clear around the first bend. Pageboy, nicely rated by Longdon, ran past the early leader entering the stretch. He could not open up daylight, for Stocks, always within range, loomed alongside. It was a thrilling duel to the wire. Our Willie's belated challenge fell far short of becoming a menace.

Bernardine W., a 5-to-1 shot with the promising Apprentice H. Mora in the saddle, won the 6-furlong opening dash on the card. Coming with a rush on the outside, the mare got up to click by a half length from Don Romiro. Lord Dalton was a length farther back. Crop, the favorite, never figured in the running. Don Romiro overtook Twosome leaving the backstretch and held on well, but Bernardine W.'s closing bid was not to be denied.

A threat of rain was in the air as the sport began and a strong wind was blowing against the horses in the stretch.

Big Play, a $9.50 for two proposition, was much the best of the veteran platers that covered 6 furlongs in the second event. The 9-year-old sprinter breezed past the wire with three lengths advantage over Zevanaid, the well-backed pacemaker. Imperial Polly landed in the third hole, a head behind Zevanaid was closely attended by the eventual winner to the top of the stretch where Kempton Knott rallied Big Play and easily shot into a commanding lead.

The famous pink and black silks of Mrs. Payne Whitney's Greentree Stable were borne to victory for the first time at the meeting, when Weary Flower, ridden out by Eddie Arcaro, won the third race by a length and a half. The St. Brideaux filly was well backed, paying $8.60. Blue Ice gained the place by a length over Dark May. Weary Flower shot out of the pack rounding the final bend and gradually drew away from the fast stepping Dark May, then held Blue Ice's late rally under control. Sandusky ran a dull race in the role of favorite.

The talent, after three straight failures, received the worst blow of all when Company, at odds-on, finished last in the fourth dash, in which only five horses competed. The gelding led by a narrow margin for a quarte. mile or so, then folded up and was beaten off. Danarco, paying $9.20, made it two in a row in a photo finish with Maebob, while Debate was a close third. Maebob was unable to maintain a length lead after entering the stretch and lost out right on the wire.

'Not Feuding With Jock,' Says Pitt Official

By Paul Mickelson.
Associated Press Sports Writer.

New York, Jan. 7. James "Whitey" Hagan, 33-year-old director of athletics at the beleaguered University of Pittsburgh, was eating a big hunk of apple pie, when he was cornered for a candid interview. One of the youngest big university sports chief in the country, he was overly shy with a lot of "off sports chiefs in the country, he finally surrendered.

• • • •

Q. What's all this we hear about you and Football Coach Jock Sutherland feuding?

A. Oh, it's a lot of hokum. Of course, Jock and I don't always agree. We have our arguments like anybody else and sometimes we battle long and hard over policies. When two business officials always agree, why, it's time for a change. We are good friends.

• • • •

Q. What was the real low down on Pitt players balking on the Rose Bowl last month?

A. The facts were horribly distorted. According to the policy we've always had at Pittsburgh, the secretary (John Weber) called the team together, presented the Bowl propositions, and then left the room so the players could decide it for themselves. No one but players were in that room. After an hour, the spokesman for the boys said they had voted against competing in any Bowl games. What the boys said is mere hearsay, because they alone know.

• • • •

Q. But didn't they demand a two weeks' vacation?

A. No. They told me later that some of the boys insisted all training for any Bowl game be confined to two weeks' rigid drill before the game, instead of running the drill over a month of afternoon practice.

• • • •

Q. Think Pitt ever will accept a post-season bid after this?

A. I suppose the immediate answer should be no, but we always leave such bids up to the players. After all, they should be the ones to decide, not the school. If we have a grand team and a big majority of the players want to go, why shouldn't they? In 1936, we received two Bowl bids. The players voted 36 to 3 against one bid and 39 to 0 in favor of the Rose Bowl.

• • • •

Q. Did Pitt get much criticism for not going to the Rose Bowl?

A. Yes; but the mail we received was about 50-50. Half of the letters praised us for not going.

Q. Are the Pitts pros?

A. No. Oh, we've had our faults like all the rest of the universities, but I think we're on the right track. Sixty per cent of the male student population works its way, all or partially, through school. Football players are above the average intelligence at Pittsburgh. We have several excellent students on the team.

• • • •

Q. Is it true Pitt is having trouble getting and keeping good teams on its schedule year after year?

A. Not exactly. We've lost a few, it's true, but our trouble is too long a schedule. This year we play ten teams—West Virginia, Temple, Southern Methodist, Wisconsin, Duquesne, Fordham, Carnegie Tech, Penn State, Nebraska and Duke. I believe it will be our last ten-game schedule. After this year we hope to confine it to eight good teams.

• • • •

Q. Can you guarantee the fans a score when the famous goose egg series is renewed with Fordham next fall?

A. Positively. If necessary, Jock may even let Papa Goldberg carry the ball. That should be one of the great games of 1938. And it's at Pittsburgh.

With that "Whitey" started to say something "off the record" so the inquiring reporter folded his notebook, dunked his pencil in a cup of coffee and said farewell. One of our resolutions for 1938 is to walk away when "off the record" stuff is sputtered. It's too tempting.

At The Post . . . .

With Bill Bennings.

Dear Al,

Selections at Tropical Park.

There's a moving van company with the slogan "We Move Anything." I should adopt the slogan "I stop anything." Yesterday I mentioned that the Benningites were clicking on the daily best bet and our best bet promptly ran out of the money. Despite the fact that many long price horses have gotten home in races here, a check-up reveals that better than 30 per cent of the favorites have won. Johnny Longden is showing the way to the riders by a wide margin at this meeting. However, Eddie Arcaro is moving up strongly and may steal the prize from his rival. Betting here is 25 per cent ahead of last year and the average is a record for this plant. Bobby Merritt has been suspended for the meeting for rough riding. There is not a scarcity of jockeys here. It was revealed this morning that 125 riders are registered. Despite the fact that many of the stars are at Santa Anita this track can show both veterans and apprentices of known ability. Mike Sarno is the leading apprentice with nine winners. There have been 43 horses claimed at the meeting to date.

BILL.

First Race—Miss Webb turned in a smart performance last out and deserves the top ranking in this field. She must be in her running shoes, however, for Johnnycake and Gold Buckle are a pair of speed merchants in their own right.

Second Race—Feng packs the punch necessary to take down a purse in a field of this sort. Jon Jon has worked well and should be a keen factor. Presidential has plenty of late foot and should be along in time to get in the money.

Third Race—Wulfstan is fairly reliable and meets his own crowd in this event. I see no reason for mistakes. Mill Pond and Winged Victory are prominent on occasions and should go well.

Fourth Race—Lawrin and Joe Schenck appear to be the class of this company. Both have worked briskly and are dead fit. Catalysis probably will take care of the others.

Fifth Race—Orientalist has proven his ability at this point. Gets in well and may take the main money by a short margin. Fair Lead and Paradisical seem to have something on the remainder of the field.

Sixth Race—Bootmaker was the victim of poor riding last out and with a change in riders I expect a different story. Palamede may hold Sunanair safe for the place award.

Seventh Race — Peaceful finds conditions that suit in this rather open event and I'm going to string along. Hats Off and Atonement II to account for the place and show pay-offs.

Eighth Race—Stone Martin, the veteran, never was better than at present. Likes the route and any price will be a good one. Starwick and Inscription to chase the top one to the wire.

Best Bet—Lawrin.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—BERNARDINE W., $12.00, $5.60, $4.30; DON ROMIRO, $7.20, $5.90; LORD DALTON, $10.80.

BERNARDINE W., gradually improving her position on the extreme outside, responded willingly to pressure through the stretch and outlasted DON ROMIRO in the final drive. DON ROMIRO, a forward contender from the start, assumed a short lead entering the stretch, made a game effort when the real issue came, but could not stave off the winner's bid. LORD DALTON, off slowly, swung to the outside leaving the backstretch, worked his way up steadily the last three furlongs and finished fastest of all.

SECOND RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $700; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won handily; place driving. Went to post 2:31. Off 2:34. Winner, J. Stewart Johnston's ch. h. Two-dollar mutuels paid—BIG PLAY, $9.50, $4.30, $3.90; ZEVANAID, $3.80, $3.20; IMPERIAL POLLY, $9.60.

BIG PLAY, quickest to begin, was eased off the pace in the run down the backstretch, but followed the leaders well up, took command with a rush entering the stretch and drew away in the final furlong. ZEVANAID moved to front swiftly in the opening quarter mile, raced LOYAL SON into submission, saved ground entering the stretch, but was no match for the winner and just lasted long enough to stall off IMPERIAL POLLY'S bid. The latter, slow to get going, circled the field after leaving the backstretch and would have been second in a few more strides.

DAILY DOUBLE, BERNARDINE W. AND BIG PLAY, PAID $56.00.

THIRD RACE—One mile. Purse, $700; claiming. For maiden 3-year-olds. Start good. Won ridden out; place driving. Went to post 3:01. Off 3:04. Winner, Greentree Stable's b. f. Associated Press Sports Editor.

New York, Jan. 7.—Plans to speed up fund-raising for America's participation in the 1940 Olympic games at Tokyo, with $400,000 as the probable goal to cover all costs, will be discussed tomorrow by the executive committee of the American Olympic Association. This figure is $50,000 in excess of U. S. expenses for the 1936 games.

"Financial groundwork already has been laid by the Amateur Athletic Union, as well as the colleges, looking toward 1940," said Avery Brundage, president of the A. O. A., "but we still have a long way to go before erecting the structure necessary to make our Olympic participation independent of eleventh hour drives for funds."

The United States already has decided not to avail itself of transportation subsidies offered by the Japanese Olympic organization. It is understood Great Britain has acted similarly. Japan's government appropriated 1,500,000 yen toward the expenses of visiting Olympic teams, designed mainly to make up for the differences in travel costs for European nations.

Some members of the executive committee of the A. O. A., it was learned tonight, will suggest parity in fund-raising for the colleges, which have now attained their goal of equal representation on all important Olympic committees through the efforts of the National Collegiate A. A. up to now the A. A. U. has carried the main financial burden, despite the fact that an increasing majority of Olympic athletes has been produced by college ranks.

"The N. C. A. A. already has acted to get financial results," said Brundage. "Frank McCormick, director of athletics at Minnesota, has again been put in charge of collegiate fund-raising. He believes $100,000, double the amount raised from the 1936 games, will be collected through N. C. A. A. sources."

Tech, Western Win in Series

forced its larger opponents to try lengthy shots, which were virtually useless the way the Presidents were throwing 'em. In the first quarter Tech grabbed a 2-to-0 lead when Marshall Dellinger counted a snowbird after a clever feint and fast dribble. This margin was upped to 4-to-0 on a neat set shot by Curtis and as the quarter closed Wilson was still without its first points.

Loosening up a bit after intermission which found it trailing 8-5, Wilson forced Tech to speed up to maintain its lead as Hal Woodson, Bill Hawksworth and Malcom McDonald counted in succession to close the gap to 12-9.

But with Connolly registering five points in less time than it takes to tell about it, Tech finished up with a rush to take a 17-11 lead with two minutes to play. This margin was sufficient although Wilson flung several dangerously close shots which rolled around the hoops with irritating regularity before oozing out again.

C. U. Five Battles American Tonight

A strictly home-grown basketball series will be revived tonight at Brookland, where Catholic University's beleaguered forces encounter those of American University at 8:30 o'clock.

Defeated in its last two games while the Eagles trounced Western Maryland by a wide margin in their lone appearance thus far, Catholic University will enter the fray a lightly regarded underdog. After several fat and prosperous years the Cards are experiencing a lean one, while American's basketball star is rising.

Pepco Takes Honors In Arcadia Bowling

The Pepco No. 1 team stole the show in the Ladies Independent bowling last night at Arcadia. Mary Hannigan won individual high game and high sets with 147 and 346 while she and her mates aggregated 592 and 1,525 for high team game and high team set.

The Examiners dominated play in the Interstate Commerce Commission League bowling last night at the Arcadia. John Wise rolled 137 for high game; Gillis, a teammate, took high set with 370, while the Examiners captured high team game and high team set with 557 and 1,598.

Sees Title Possibilities.

"As I see it," explained Jimmy, "there's only one good middleweight in the world, and that, of course, is the champion, Freddie Steele. And if there's anybody in the business that threatens to beat Steele or to succeed him when he retires, I'd like to have him. I've seen most of them, both here and abroad, and Abrams looks like the goods to me."

Everett fights Murray Kanner here Monday on the same card that Abrams will headline. Where Abrams fights Finnigan in eight rounds, so does Everett, claimant to the District heavyweight championship meet Kanner in a bout of equal length. In a third eight-rounder, Billy Borroughs meets Johnny Lucas, of Baltimore.

Four-Rounders Scheduled.

In two four-round openers, scheduled yesterday, Tommy Hoover and Al Jamison, local welterweights will clash; and El Brookman, local welterweight will oppose Young Tony Ross, of Baltimore.

Promoter Howard Livingston was still trying last night to arrange a bout for his Friday show, to be staged January 14 at the Rialto Fight Club. Although he was awaiting the outcome of several bouts in New York last night, before making any announcement, he assured that the show will definitely be held this week.

He seeks a foe for Andre Jessurun, since it appears Vittirio Venturi, originally scheduled to meet Jessurun here last night, now has no intention of doing so. If no suitable foe can be obtained, Livingston said he will switch plans and import two separate headliners.

Keller to Oppose Berger on Court

Two of the greatest athletes ever turned out by the University of Maryland are to oppose in the New Takoma Fire House gymnasium tomorrow night at 8:30 o'clock when Dorsey Marketers, of Hagerstown, duel the Takoma Fire Department professionals in the first of a series of Sunday night games.

Representing the colorful invaders is Charley Keller, prize New York Yankee rookie outfielder who led the International League's batsmen in his first year in organized baseball, and who was a baseball and basketball star at Maryland.

Outstanding in a star studded Takoma line-up is Louis ("Bozie") Berger, twice a basketball All-America at Maryland and now an infielder with the Chicago White Sox.

F. B. I. Cagers Win.

Richmond, Va., Jan. 7.—F. B. I. defeated the Medical College of Virginia by a score of 60 to 12. Burgess was high scorer with 16 points, Robinson was next with 13. Score at half: F. B. I., 21; Medical College, 11. The Medical College scored two foul shots in the second half.

This Morning . . . .

It was confusing to Princeton but hardly effective. Football was in its infant days at the Naval Academy and Princeton scored an overwhelming victory. That same year Princeton beat Virginia, 115 to 0, and Columbia, 89 to 0. And touchdowns in those days counted only four points! It is also noted that in that same season Yale beat Princeton, 32-0.

Summoned by Roosevelt

Phil King coached at Princeton after his playing days and then took his football talents to Wisconsin as head coach of the Badgers. He was one of the coaches who was summoned to the White House by President Theodore Roosevelt in 1906 when the President, alarmed by the mounting football deaths, heeded the pleas of panicky parents and the clergy to take action.

Roosevelt threatened to abolish the game unless injury-reducing reforms were immediately instituted, and then it was that the coaches introduced the forward pass in an effort to break away from the bone-crushing mass plays.

Phil King saw football sweep the Nation in a near-hysteria for the game after its beginnings as an unorganized, pick-up sport. He was a transcendant figure in the push, tug and maul era of the game and to him fell football's supreme honors. He was captain, player, coach with teams that were the best, this 160-pounder was, and, as I was saying, the sports pgaes have a potent claim on his obituary.

Bronko Nagurski Will Defend Wrestling Title Here Thursday

Bronko Nagurski, erstwhile Minnesota All-American football player, will defend his world's wrestling championship next Thursday night at Turner's Arena against John Sullivan, the 7-foot-4-inch Irish giant.

Joe Turner, local mat impresario, announced that the title battle will be one-fall-to-a-finish.

This will be Nagurski's second defense of his championship in Washington. Late last summer before 5,000 spectators at Griffith Stadium, the 235-pound Nagurski slammed Joe Cox, the Kansas Krasher, in a thrilling 40-minute bout.

While alternating between pro football and wrestling the last seven years, Nagurski has won 250 matches. The only defeat to mar his record came at the hands of the Washington Redskins, who whipped the Bronko and his Chicago Bears for the world's professional football championship last month in Chicago.

Promoter Turner selected the mountainous Sullivan as the Nag's opponent on the strength of the Irishman's impressive victories here over Vanka Zelezniak, John Grandovich and Billy Hanson. Sullivan threw Zelezniak and Grandovich the same night.

Nagurski won the wrestling crown from Dean Detton last June in Minneapolis, and has defended it successfully eight times.

G-Men Play K. of C. Five

Those rampaging G-men from the Bureau of Investigation will meet the strong Baltimore Knights of Columbus in one of the preliminary games on the basketball bill featuring the Heurich Brewers and the Kingston (N. Y.) Colonials of the American Professional League tomorrow afternoon at the Heurich gym, Twenty-sixth and D streets northwest.

Investigation, sporting perhaps its greatest team in years, will meet in the Caseys the topnotch amateur team in Baltimore today. The Casey's formerly were the Stonewall Democratic Club which is studded with one-time college stars.

The Investigation-K. of C. game will start at 2:30, with the Heurich-Kingston game at 3:30. There will be another preliminary at 1:30 between Fort Myer and D. C. Fire Department.

Heurich, which won from the Celtics last week, will be facing such famous pro players as Phil Rabin, of Long Island fame; Allie Schuckman, Carl Husta and Tiny Hearn. Kingston is running second in the American League to Kate Smith's Celtics.

A Charity Game.

All proceeds of the basketball game between Elon and George Washington University, to be held Monday night, January 10, go to the President's Birthday celebration fund.

Calvert Hall Team Beaten

St. John's Gains First Victory Over Foe.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Baltimore, Jan. 7.—The Charging Cadets of St. John's Prep, of Washington, D. C., charged through the previously undefeated Calvert Hall five here today, holding it to 5 points in the second half, to win, 44 to 16.

Although things were nip and tuck for the first five minutes of play, the Cadets held an 8-to-6 lead at the end of the first quarter. A scoring spree sent them out in front at the half by 19 to 11.

Close guarding then combined with deadly accurate shooting to turn the game into a rout for the District team. Led by Joey Gallagher, John (Rosy) Swagert and Ken Battiste, the Washingtonians rang up 25 points in the second half, to register their fifth victory.

The Calvert Hall team had a streak of 12 consecutive victories until today.

Woman Beaten And Assaulted By Masked Man

Young Ballston Matron Left Unconscious in Yard of Her Home.

Beaten, tied and gagged, a young Ballston (Va.) woman was criminally attacked last night in the yard of her home by a huge masked colored man and left unconscious in a ditch.

She was Mrs. Virginia Miller, 30, of 4106 North Ninth street, Ballston, and had just returned from her work in Washington. She was discovered by Charles James, homeward-bound Ballston man, who heard moans in the rear of the house.

Smeared With Lipstick.

Her pocketbook had been emptied of its contents, which were scattered over the ground, and $9 stolen. The attacker had smeared Mrs. Miller's cheeks with her own lipstick.

Taken to the office of Dr. J. T. Hazel, near by, she regained consciousness briefly, then was revived by stimulants. After treatment for a bruise on her head, facial abrasions caused by a gag, and abrasions on her arms from thongs, she returned home.

While she was at the physician's office, Edward and Bruce Smoot, her brothers, made an unsuccessful search of the neighborhood.

Pulled Into Alley.

Mrs. Miller told the police she alighted from a bus near the home of Mr. and Mrs. Howard Smoot, her parents, and started walking toward her own home. On the way she met a sister, Miss Mary Jane Smoot, night superintendent of Alexandria Hospital. When they parted, Mrs. Miller started past the entrance of an alley to the rear of her home.

It was then that the attacker reached out, caught her and pulled her into the alley, throwing her to the ground.

"Now I've got you!" he said, and started beating her.

She said he laughed when she offered him her pocketbook to leave her unharmed.

Foreign Buying During Decline $73,854,000

Treasury Figures Upset Idea That Drop Was Due to Overseas Sales.

By the Associated Press.

The Treasury disclosed yesterday that foreigners bought $73,854,000 worth of securities in this country in the first month and a half of the stock market decline. The figures gave official backing to heretofore unofficial assurances from Government circles that the decline was due to American and not foreign selling.

For the period from August 11 to September 29, foreigners bought in this country $17,682,000 worth of American securities and $56,172,000 worth of foreign securities previously held in this country. August 14 was the high point of the stock market, followed by a steady retreat until the first major break occurred on September 7.

The figures made public yesterday were contained in a report on capital movements between the United States and the rest of the world during July, August and September. For the quarterly period, foreign purchases of securities here totaled $153,630,000; including $55,588,000 of American securities and $98,042,000 of foreign securities.

Principal purchasers of American securities after the market decline began were England, Holland, Switzerland, and Canada. France, Italy and Germany sold U. S. securities in relatively small quantities. Latin American and Far Eastern countries also sold.

Copper and Lead Prices Advanced

New York, Jan. 7 (AP).—Copper for delivery in the United States was marked up another quarter of a cent a pound to 10½ cents by a leading smelter today. Producers continued to ask 11 cents.

During the recent cessation of demand, smelters early in December dropped the price to 10 cents.

Active buying of copper in export markets and more interest among domestic consumers have bolstered the price. Two producers today boosted the price of lead $2 a ton. American Smelting & Refining Co. moved up to a basis of 4.85 cents a pound New York, and St. Joseph Lead Co. quoted 4.90 cents, New York, and 4.70 cents, East St. Louis.

Gold from Japan, Exports to France

The Commerce Department reported yesterday imports of $13,921,043 of gold, of which $11,533,599 came from Japan, during the week ended December 31. Offsetting this in part, exports totaled $5,004,605, practically all to France.

Silver imports during the week totaled $2,542,718, chiefly from England, Canada and Mexico.

Montgomery Ward Sales.

Chicago, Jan. 7 (AP).—Montgomery Ward & Co. reported today December sales totaled $51,360,407, a decrease of 0.83 per cent compared with the volume of $51,789,337 in December, 1936. Sales for the 11 months ended December 31 totaled $410,699,553, an increase of 15.9 per cent compared with the corresponding 1936 period.

Cotton Rally Invites Sales

New York, Jan. 7 (AP).—Further early advances of cotton attracted realizing and hedging in late trading today. March sold off from 8.52 to 8.46 and closed at 8.48, with final prices 1 point net higher to 3 lower.

Early advances were extended a few points further on what was believed to be new outside buying. Selling increased slightly when May touched 8.60 and demand tapered off. Trading was quiet during the greater part of the day. In the afternoon, prices eased 1 to 6 points below Thursday's finals. Closeness of cotton to loan levels partly accounted for the less aggressive buying.

Wheat Rally In Final Hour Offsets Drop

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Jan. 7.—Brisk renewal of purchasing movements late today more than overcame earlier wheat price downturns that resulted from big sales to realize profits for recent buyers.

Helping the late rally of wheat values were final estimates that nearly 2,000,000 bushels of North American wheat had been taken today for shipment overseas, including 1,000,000 bushels of Canadian wheat, a good part of it new crop wheat not yet planted. Another stimulus was announced of export purchases today of 2,000,000 bushels of United States corn.

At the close, Chicago wheat futures were unchanged to ¼-cent higher compared with yesterday's finish, May A6¼@96⅜, July 87⅞@90; Corn ½@⅞ up, May 62¾@62⅞, July 62½@62¾; oats, ⅛@⅜ advanced; rye ⅛ off, and provisions 10 to 20 cents dearer.

Montreal, Jan. 7 (AP).—Part of a $10,000,000 freight equipment buying program was announced today by Canadian Pacific Railway. Tenders have been called, officials said, for 2,000 40-ton steel sheathed box cars, 200 twin-hopper cars of 100,000 pounds capacity, 200 eight-inch steel underframe cars, 200 flat cars and 100 low-side drop-end gondola cars.

In addition to the $10,000,000 program, tenders also were called for on ten Hudson-type locomotives, with the possibility of similar orders later, officials said.

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively
A Special Correspondent.

Stocks and Bonds Are Mixed in Moderate Trading; Steels and Motors Weaken.

New York, Jan. 7.—Irregularity in bonds and stocks in moderate trading brought the week's full sessions to a fairly satisfactory conclusion and left the future as wide open as ever. Stocks began with price changes divided and ended that way, with the tone somewhat less confident than it was at the start. United States bonds failed to agree. May wheat lost an eighth of a cent to 96¼ cents a bushel in the Chicago market.

Stock prices were buffeted about a bit, but most of the time they were a little farther down the field than was the case yesterday. Publication of investment trust accounts for the last quarter of the old year confirm what the SEC reports of insiders have been showing, namely, that liquidation of stocks continued up to or near the end of the year. That raises the question of whether the stock market has not been quite thoroughly deflated and entitled to a rise simply on long-term investment account. It would seem as though it were reacting to that influence, in which case, if business does not shortly pick up, another period of dullness or weakness is likely to ensue before the showdown next spring. By spring it is the hope of all that business itself will have begun to improve.

By midafternoon moderate gains in stocks were in the majority and prices were close to their opening levels and near the highs for the day. Leading industrials sold off in early afternoon, improved a little and then turned rather scraggly in the last hour, lacking the zip of the closing rally yesterday. United States Steel was priced consistently beneath its previous close. General Electric played about even. General Motors was barely steady and Chrysler worker a bit lower. A few preferred stocks demonstrated their thin markets by rising or falling 2 to 5 points. The range was narrow for the majority of stocks.

Hope and Fear.

Securities market sentiment now is an odd mixture of hope for improving business "by spring," hope for a determined stand in Congress on sound finance, and anxiety (or hope, as the case may be) over inflation. At least four well-known businessmen in the past day or two have shown that they hope for business improvement shortly, but it is difficult to say how much of sheer hope and how much of genuine expectation is involved. Ford, President Knudsen, of General Motors; President Wysor, of Republic Steel, and President Wood, of Sears, Roebuck & Co., are among the optimistic spokesmen for business.

Few doubt that the advent of economy in Washington would go a long way toward the realization of those hopes for better times, and that otherwise, with the threat of inflation intensified, even a temporary spurt in business would be worse than none at all. The more businessmen think of the implications of President Roosevelt's assertion that we must look to a permanent and untouchable budget of $7,000,000,000—plus extras—the greater will be their deficit of confidence. Not only is such a huge spending program indefensible in itself, but it is patently quite beyond the taxing ability of the country to stand, unless the burden to be borne is to be so great as to set back business further, reduce consumer purchasing power and put the collection of any such amount in taxes still deeper into the ditch of impossibility.

Guaranteeing Inflation.

Perhaps the worst feature of the budget position at present is the frank policy of proposing in advance that, after eight or nine years of deficit, the Government be so directed as to operate on a deficit. To work for a balance and, because of falling business profits or unexpected and unavoidable expenditures, fail to achieve one is far worse than deliberately to jack up outlay so as to guarantee a deficit. That is just what the Administration is doing, with the aid of its chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, but, according to report, without the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The psychological condition thus created is a bad one. If the President says he expects, and even wishes in order to promote his grandiose social and political schemes, a budget of a billion this year and another of a billion next year, it is just too much to expect that mortal Congressmen (with a few exceptions) will battle heroically to stay even within that vast space. The President is asking for all sorts of spending legislation. Either Congress will do the unexpected and revise the program, or inflation on a grand scale in a year or two, if not before, is highly probable. That will be a tax that the President's underprivileged will feel with crushing force.

Commodity Prices.

While Government officials are railing at industry for its alleged attempt to hold up prices, the farm products area is being fairly well protected. This week's wholesale price index of the Bureau of Labor Statistics shows a small drop, but it occurred in foods. The index for all commodities other than farm products fell from 83.1 to 82.8. Semi-manufactured articles and finished products were down. Compared with a year ago finished products are up slightly, suffering from the rigidity of costs of which a large element is labor. Farm products, on the other hand, are down sharply from last year because of the profligacy of nature.

Poker.

Jesse Jones has the reputation in Wall street of being a consummate poker player. He loves to trade, it is said. It is in his blood. It may be great fun, but it is a bit tough on security owners. Erie bonds, which broke badly on failure of the road to pay interest due on five issues a few days ago, and which rallied on news that the Baltimore & Ohio would be granted an RFC loan along with a rumor that the Erie might get something also even without a Chesapeake & Ohio guaranty demanded by Mr. Jones, fell again today. The fresh fall was caused by Mr. Jones intimation yesterday that he would do nothing because it thought that was a job for the C. & O. although he didn't say outright that he would refuse an RFC loan.

Grain Receipts Set Peak for 8 Years

Chicago, Jan. 7 (AP).—Grain receipts in Chicago last year totaled 145,382,000 bushels, the largest since 1929, Lyman C. West, Board of Trade statistician, reported today. Receipts in 1936 were 129,000,000 bushels. West attributed the larger volume to the big yield of winter wheat although increased production of corn and other grains contributed to the bigger business.

Hide Prices Rise Sharply in Month

New York, Jan 7 (AP).—Trade sources reported today a sale by Swift & Co., of Chicago, of 16,000 Milwaukee calf hides at 16 cents a pound, or 1½ cents above the previous sale. It also was reported that the firm declined to accept this bid for further supplies.

Half D.C. Needy Facing Loss of Financial Help

House Group Looked to for Restoration of Cut by Budget Bureau.

Possibly half of the District's 6,000 unemployables now living on relief must be cut from the rolls if the House District sub-committee on welfare fails to restore a Budget Bureau reduction in relief funds to $900,000 for 1939. The committee, scheduled to start hearings on the relief items yesterday, postponed these until next week to attack other welfare matters first.

Relief to families for 2,661 dependent children, it was disclosed yesterday, is practically a fixed charge and would consume most of the $900,000 recommended. Continuation of this form of relief is necessary if the District Welfare Board is to maintain its credit with the Social Security Board for other funds, representing $162,340 for next year, to be distributed to families of dependent children.

Most of the approximately 2,661 adult unemployables remaining who face loss of District relief would be unable to work even if they could find jobs, because of illness or other difficulties. The welfare board, because of lack of funds, has been unable to give financial aid to employables.

The board, in its estimates to the District Commissioners, forecast an increase in the relief burden and asked for $2,022,750 for care of unemployables and $1,250,000 for the relief of employables, a total of $3,272,750 for all relief. This sum was hacked down to $900,000 by the Budget Bureau.

25,000 Who'll Get Jobless Insurance Must Leave WPA

By the Associated Press.

Between 25,000 and 30,000 persons will have to leave work relief jobs this month because they are eligible for unemployment insurance checks, the Works Progress Administration ruled yesterday.

Aubrey Williams, acting WPA administrator, announced the policy that workers entitled to the insurance benefits could not retain work relief jobs.

However, he said those dismissed would be re-employed, if sufficient funds were available, as soon as they ceased receiving unemployment compensation.

Walsh Asks Navy To 'Scare' World

Urging the adoption by the United States of a new naval policy which will "put the fear of war into any nation with aggressive tendencies," Senator David I. Walsh, of Massachusetts, chairman of the Senate Naval Affairs Committee, last night told the United States Naval Academy Alumni Association the United States no longer can be bound by promises upon "scraps of paper."

The Navy is expensive, he admitted, adding that he was "convinced, now more than ever, that the only way to preserve peace is to have a strong sea force."

He urged, therefore, that immediate steps be taken to develop the Navy and pointed out that if building of ships were started at once the sea forces could not be brought up to "treaty strength" until 1942.

Officers Deny Guilt In Fatal Ship Blaze

Baltimore, Jan. 7 (AP).—Three officers of the Steamer City of Baltimore, destroyed by fire last July 29 with the loss of three lives, denied before a marine inspection board today they were guilty of negligence.

Choir Girl Kills Father

Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

DOROTHY SCHAEFER,

18-year-old Jersey City choir singer, told police yesterday she fatally stabbed her father, Charles Schaefer, jr., with a butcher knife because he menaced her and her mother in an "alcoholic fury" over prospects of losing his job. "I only meant to scare him," she sobbed.

40 Children See Ex-Official Kill Wife's Parents

By the Associated Press.

Williamson, W. Va., Jan. 7.—Willie Maguire, 38-year-old former constable, hid in the woods today from a posse hunting him for killing his wife's parents in front of 40 high school students at Lenore.

Corporal R. D. Woofter, of the State police, said he thought Maguire was deranged.

Woofter said Maguire went to the school and found Mrs. Marshall in a hall. An argument started and Maguire began shooting, Woofter said. The students, who were starting home for the day, scurried out of range, some leaping from the first-floor windows. Marshall came from the basement and Maguire shot him, too, the trooper said.

Woofter said Maguire's wife, daughter of the Marshalls, left him several weeks ago and took their two children to live with relatives in Wayne County.

Maguire was elected constable in 1936 but resigned last November.

McCarran Agrees With G.H.A. Idea, Scores Finances

Senator Pat McCarran (Democrat), of Nevada, yesterday gave tacit indorsement to the principle underlying establishment of Group Health Association, Inc., although he is sharply critical of the financial means by which it was launched.

Previously noncommittal on the merits of GHA, the Nevadan said yesterday:

"I can't see anything against a group or groups of employes organizing for their mutual welfare. I hope to go down and visit the clinic one day soon."

McCarran reiterated that his principal interest, however, remains the "diversion" of $40,000 in Home Owners Loan Corporation funds to the newly established GHA.

"Whether legislation will be required to prevent a recurrence of this incident or whether the same end can be gained by other means is yet to be decided," he declared. "Maybe we'll just have to clip the wings of the HOLC."

McCarran's conviction that the HOLC acted "without authority of law," as charged by Acting Comptroller General Elliott, in allocating $40,000 to GHA appeared unaffected by an opinion of the Senate legislative counsel that the act was not illegal. McCarran made the informal opinion public on Thursday.

Hoyas Bow To Gonzaga

Leading all the way, Gonzaga High School launched its Prep School League campaign yesterday at Garrett Park, where it vanquished Georgetown Prep, 25-20, in a hotly contested game. The preppers trailed at half time, 14-9, and were held at this distance throughout the second period. Only Nadler and Fahrendorf were able to score for the losers.

Attack Suspect Held in Capital

A man was held for investigation last night in the attempted attack on Nancy Lee Summers, 18-year-old business school student, last October, after he had been partially identified by the girl at Twelfth Precinct station.

The man, police said, was one of three picked up on sex charges yesterday and questioned. This prisoner, they said, so closely answered the description furnished by Miss Summers, even to a defect of speech, that they decided to have her make the effort at identification.

President Urges Press Rates Rise

By the Associated Press.

Publishers of newspapers and magazines received an invitation from President Roosevelt yesterday to take the initiative in reducing postal subsidies which he said they now enjoy.

In response to a question at his press conference, he said he believed the time had long since passed when the Government should subsidize newspapers and magazines.

Asked if he intended to do anything about it, he suggested the press take the initiative.

Postal officials agreed tonight with the President, but also declined to take the initiative.

The Postmaster General's report for the last fiscal year showed it cost the Government $38,000,000 to transport newspapers and that it got back only $9,000,000 of this.

C.I.O. Asks Cummings To Quiz Steamship Co.

By the United Press.

The Committee for Industrial Organization last night requested Attorney General Cummings to investigate its charges that the Bull Steamship Co. violated the Byrnes law in connection with the maritime strike now in progress at San Juan, Puerto Rico.

In a telegram to Cummings, C. I. O. Director John Brophy charged the steamship line had taken on 18 strike-breakers at Baltimore as passengers aboard the steamship Barbara, bound for San Juan.

Fight Fans Pay Tribute to Memory Of Edward Neil, Deceased Scribe

By the Associated Press.

New York, Jan. 7.—Lights were dimmed tonight in Madison Square Garden, while a fight crowd of 11,000 spectators stood silently and a spotlight shone on a laurel wreath decorating the ringside press seat occupied for years by Edward Joseph Neal, jr., Associated Press war correspondent and sports writer who died at the "ringside" of the Spanish civil war.

Momentarily, between fights, the roar of the crowd subsided as Harry Balough, the official announcer, spoke a few words of tribute in behalf of Neil's sports-writing associates and the notes of a bugler, sounding "Taps," echoed from the darkened recesses of the big arena.

The famous Garden "battle pit," long a background for Neil's colorful fight stories, was the setting for one of boxing's rarest tributes. It marked the first time since the death of T. A. (Tad) Dorgan, famous writer and cartoonist, nine years ago, that honor was paid to the memory of a former ringsider.

Maryland Boy, 3, Enjoys Cigars as Well as His Pipe

Ironshire, Md., Jan. 7 (AP).—John Merlin Brown, 3, sat on a box in a Berlin, Md., store and borrowed matches to light his corncob pipe when it went out.

His mother, Mrs. John Brown, doing a bit of shopping, said the boy had been smoking since he was 18 months old. "He doesn't inhale," she said, "but seems to get a lot of joy from just smoking." He usually carries his own matches, she added, but he is careful with them.

She bought him a 5-cent cigar when she finished shopping. He put it in his overall pocket to smoke after dinner.

Y Lists Three Sports for Today

A varied sports program is on tap at the Central Y. M. C. A. today, with handball, badminton and basketball games sharing the spotlight in the order named.

Centering around Al Hobelman, former Y. M. C. A. national singles champion, the Baltimoreans are reputed to have one of the strongest handball teams in this section. Little is known about the badminton team, although Baltimore admittedly boasts some of the best badminton players in the country.

Auto Factory Sales Pass 5,000,000 Mark

New York, Jan. 7 (AP).—Factory sales of automobiles by American manufacturers in 1937 totaled 5,002,188 vehicles, including both passenger cars and trucks, the second time in history the 5,000,000-mark has been passed, the Automobile Manufacturers Association announced today.

The 1937 figure was 8 per cent above the 4,716,724 units for 1936. The other year in which sales topped 5,000,000 was 1929, when the total was 5,621,715.

Factory shipments in December, the final 1937 month, aggregated 332,559 units, a decline of 12 per cent under the 376,637 in November, and a drop of 36 per cent under the 518,958 for December, 1936, the association also announced.

Don Budge Loses In Doubles Play

Melbourne, Australia, Jan 7 (AP). Don Budge, Oakland, Calif., redhead who holds the American and Wimbledon titles, was extended in singles and defeated in doubles today in the course of triangular tennis matches among American, German and Australian stars.

Henkel then registered a surprise victory at 2—6, 11—9, 6—2 over Adrian Quist, of Australia.

Gene Flynn tied the all-time individual scoring record of eight and established this season's record for shortest game last night when he defeated G. Lambron in the District Three-Cushion Amateur Billiard championships at the Royal Parlors, 35-12.

He won in 34 innings to establish the new record. In the final inning, he had an unfinished run of 6. In the nightcap game, Gene Ruark won from J. Pinney, 35-18. Each had runs of 3.

Bob Burns Says—

A lot of movie stars have told me that they owe their success to so many twists of fate involvin' so many people along the way that they wouldn't know who to reward. It ain't that way in the business world because you can usually put your finger on the incident that led to your good fortune.

One time a big steel magnate came through my home town and he happened to visit our school. He noticed a boy pickin' up a pin so he called the boy over and said "when you get through school I want you to come to see me and I'll put you to work." So the boy did, and he became a millionaire.

Not long ago he sent one of his old schoolmates a check for $10,000 and he said "I owe this to you because if I hadn't hated you so much, I never would of been seen pickin' up that pin to put on your seat."

Fred H. Gauss, Head of Paper Company, Dies

Fred H. Gauss, 49, president of a paper company bearing his name, died early yesterday in Georgetown Hospital from a rare streptococcus infection of the heart.

On Tuesday a Nation-wide radio appeal was sent out for someone who had recovered from the disease to give a blood transfusion. Although there were about 500 responses no blood of the proper type was found. Four transfusions which were given failed to help.

Doctors at Georgetown Hospital yesterday said there is no known cure for the disease, streptococcus veridans endocarditis, nor is there a case on record of a recovery from the infection which gets into the blood stream. They had believed that only blood from a person who had recovered from the infection would help Mr. Gauss.

A diagnosis of the disease was made December 13, and Mr. Gauss was taken to the hospital a week later. A brother, Frank H. Gauss, yesterday said the family was "deeply grateful" to every one who had tried to help.

Mr. Gauss was founder and president of the Gauss Paper Co. He was a native of Lemars, Iowa, but had come to Annapolis as a small boy.

He was a thirty-second degree Mason, member of Annapolis Lodge; a Shriner, and past patron, St. John's Lodge, Order of the Eastern Star. He also was a member of the Board of Trade and the Optimist Club.

Licensing of C.B.S. Broadcasts Eyed By Va. Commission

Richmond, Jan. 7 (AP).—The processes by which the vocalizing of radio crooners and the strains of "swing" music are broadcast by means of sound waves that recognize no State boundaries, were described today to the Virgina Corporation Commission, which must decide whether the Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., is to be licensed by Virginia.

The fee C. B. S. would be required to pay for transmitting programs over Station WJSV, in Arlington County, is relatively small, but the case is regarded as highly important to the company as a possible precedent for similar actions in other States.

State officials connected with the case said they expected C. B. S. to appeal to the State supreme court and possibly the United States Supreme Court, should the corporation commission decide against the company.

Hearing of testimony was completed today and the State was given three weeks to file briefs. After elapse of that period, the company will be given the same length of time to file its briefs.

U. S. Board Opens Investigation Into Hoover Accident

San Francisco, Jan. 7 (AP).—A special marine investigating board of the Department of Commerce met here today to inquire into the grounding of the palatial liner President Hoover on a coral reef off Hoishoto Island December 10.

Capt. William Fisher, chairman, said the board would seek to determine the cause of the Hoover's grounding and consider possible charges against members of the ship's crew.

One hundred sixty-five members of the crew arrived here today aboard the President McKinley, indignant at charges of drunkenness, molestation of women and rioting. Sam Cohen, steward's delegate, declared: "We took off 800 passengers in less than nine hours. Does that sound as if the men were drinking?"

Rail Clerk Seized In $110,000 Theft Over 7-Yr. Period

A trusted Soo Line railway clerk and messenger in Minneapolis obtained $110,000 illegally from his employers during the last seven years, the Federal Bureau of Investigation announced yesterday.

The statement followed arrest of John L. Neal by G-men and arraignment of Neal in St. Paul, where he was put in jail in default of $25,000 bond. His apprehension followed complaint which charged him with taking $95 from the National Bank & Trust Co., of Minneapolis. Investigation revealed the long series of thefts, according to the FBI.

According to the official statement, issued by the office of J. Edgar Hoover, Neal, as a messenger, called at the bank frequently for funds for the Soo. Some of these, he often told bank authorities, were to be given by him to the treasurer of the Soo. These, the FBI charged, he often appropriated for his own use. Part of the money was found in his brother's golf bag, the FBI asserted.

Airliner Plunges Into Marsh When It Misses Field

By the Associated Press.

Newark, N. J., Jan. 7.—Stranded four hours in the middle of a swamp, five passengers of an airliner from Chicago cheered and whistled today while their pilot guided rescuers to them.

Pilot Usher Rousch, of Chicago, was cut over the eye when his head struck the instrument panel, but he traveled more than two miles through mud and water to meet a rescue party.

The passengers were unhurt and their spirits buoyed by Co-Pilot Stanley Gerding, of Chicago, and a pretty blonde stewardess, Veronica Lalley, a graduate nurse of Mercy Hospital, Janesville, Wisc.

Rousch rode the Newark radio beam, but the heavy rain hampered his visibility and his landing was short. The wheels struck the marsh and the plane came to rest on badly damaged landing gear and fuselage.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Friday Morning Music Club presents Domenico Iascone, flautist (Marjorie Davis, accompanist); Constance Russell, pianist, and Rita Rozada, mezzo-soprano (Helen Grimes, accompanist) in Barker Hall.

At the weekly meeting of the Friday Morning Musical Club yesterday, Domenico Iascone opened the varied program with arrangements for flute and piano of two movements from Bach's B minor suite for flute and strings, the gravely beautiful dance of the blessed spirits from Gluck's "Orfeo et Euridice," and Ravel's vocalise, "Piece en Forme de Habanera." His tone, which was never overblown, was clear and suave, and his readings were plastic in phrasing.

In the two groups of piano pieces contributed by Constance Russell were heard Busoni's transcription of Bach's chorale-prelude, "Ich ruf zu Dir, Herr;" Mendelssohn's prelude and fugue in E minor, Debussy's "Soiree dans Grenade" and Erno von Dohanyi's paraphrase of the waltz from Delibes' ballet, "Naila." A dashing and technically well equipped player, Miss Russell displayed for the most part the showy side of her resources, allowing only a glimpse of her interpretative insight in the quiet reading of the chorale-prelude.

One would surmise that Miss Russell has been recently bent upon developing brilliance and speed at the expense of tone color. Her dynamics were much too emphatic in the Debussy nocturne, which should never exceed a mezz-forte, for its impressionistic effects depend upon subtle contrasts. In the Dohnanyi piece, the clarity of the arabesques was frequently blurred by injudicious pedaling. These are remediable matters in so promising a pianist.

Rita Rozada presented the sequidilla from "Carmen" and four songs by Augusta Holmes, the Anglo-Irish composer whose name was pronounced Olmase by the French in compliment to her adoption of Paris as a residence and of Gallic flavor in her music. Two of these songs, "La Lampe Merveilleuse" and "L'Heure Bleu," are not often heard and were, therefore, the more welcome. Mme. Rozada's voice has the true mezzo range of color, and she uses it adroitly. Her readings were strongly dramatized, and in her zeal she forgot that Carmen sings 'Pres des ramparts de Seville" with her hands tied behind her back.

One of Princeton's Greats Was Co-Proprietor of Palace Store.

Philip King, 65, former co-proprietor of King's Palace Department Store, and one of the greatest athletes in the history of Princeton University, died in Emergency Hospital yesterday. He had undergone an operation there several days ago for an ailment of the abdomen.

A graduate of Princeton in the class of 1893, Mr. King was for four years on Walter Camp's all-American football team as halfback and quarterback. He was captain of both the baseball and football teams and played both second and third base for the nine. After his graduation he became Princeton's first paid athletic coach, placed in charge of both football and baseball. During his coaching days he won a law degree.

In 1898 he went to Madison, Wis., where he was associated in law with the late Senator John Colt Spooner, a former Governor of Wisconsin. Later he coached both football and baseball at the University of Wisconsin.

A native of Washington, he returned here in 1902 to take over his father's business, and with his brothers, Harry King and the late Joseph King, he operated the King's Palace store until 1936. In his early days in Washington he coached the Georgetown University baseball team which, at the beginning of the century, won all its games.

Mr. King was the first president of the Merchants and Manufacturers Association and a founder of a credit bureau here. He was long associated with the Better Business Bureau. He was a charter member of the University Club and belonged to the Congressional Country Club.

Surviving Mr. King are his widow, Mrs. Jeanette H. King; a son, Philip King, jr.; three brothers, Harry and Abe, of Washington, and Samuel, of New York, and a sister, Mrs. Harry Kaufman, of Washington. Mr. King's residence was 2101 Connecticut avenue.

Funeral services will be held at Gawler's chapel, 1750 Pennsylvania avenue, Monday at 11 a. m., with burial in Rock Creek Cemetery.

Alfred J. Stofer, Correspondent Here, Is Dead

Veteran Journalist Was Gridiron Member for Nearly 50 Years.

Maj. Alfred J. Stofer, 84, veteran newspaper correspondent, died in his sleep Thursday night at his home, 7705 Thirteenth street northwest.

Elected to the Gridiron Club in 1889, Maj. Stofer was the second oldest journalist in the organization in length of membership.

He was born at Culpeper, Va., and attended Bethel Military Academy, near Warrenton. After graduation, he edited for two years a Culpeper weekly left him by his father, then accepting a position as editorial writer on the old St. Louis Republican.

During residence in Missouri he acquired his military title for service in the National Guard.

Maj. Stofer came to Washington in 1885 as correspondent for the Republican, later representing the Baltimore Sun and the Birmingham News. He retired from active journalism in 1924.

An enthusiastic member of the Gridiron Club for nearly half a century, he enlivened a number of annual banquets with his rendition of "The Watermelon Song," a performance which became so famous it was preserved on a phonograph record.

Although a lifelong Democrat, Maj. Stofer became an intimate friend of President Taft, and "The Watermelon Song," Gridiron members recalled yesterday, was frequently heard in the White House.

Besides his activities in the Gridiron Club, Maj. Stofer was a member of Alpha Tau Omega Fraternity.

Funeral arrangements have not yet been completed.

For his gallantry in action near Guadalupe Ridge, Luzon, where he withdrew his brigade hospital from danger although it was nearly surrounded by insurgents, Col. Penrose was awarded the Silver Star decoration.
